Industrialists Plot to Scuttle Trade Pacts, Wallace Says

Tells House Inquiry Farmers and Labor Are Being Used to Mask 'Tariff Grab'

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Backstopping Secretary of State Hull in support of reciprocal trade act extension, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace yesterday charged certain farm and labor groups are being used as "political fronts" for an attack on the trade program.

He told the House Ways and Means Committee that industrial interests are trying to scuttle the program in preparation for "another tariff grab."

"They are apparently attempting to induce certain farm interests and certain labor interests to act as the shock troops in this campaign, so that they themselves can stay in the rear and come up in time to walk off once more with the major share of the booty."

Denies Harm to Agriculture

Wallace took the witness chair to deny that the trade agreements program is "sacrificing the interests of agriculture" after Hull in a second day of testimony declared tariff "log-rolling, lobbying and unholy alliances" would follow defeat of reciprocal trading.

Like Hull, Wallace declared that the old Fordney-McCumber and Smoot-Hawley tariff laws had contributed to the world's present ills. He said Hitler's rise to power might have been forestalled had the trade agreements program been instituted earlier.

In two hours of testimony, Secretary Wallace, who has not always seen eye to eye with his Cabinet colleague:

Declared the trade program has been "distinctly worth while" from the standpoint of agriculture as well as the welfare of the Nation as a whole.

Said it may be necessary again to engage in both Government and private loans to foreign nations, but the "next time" loans should be made only to countries from which we are ready to import in increasing quantities by way of payment.

Denied that the trade agreements program is "inconsistent" with the Commodity Credit Corporation's surplus farm purchases, and asserted the two policies were in fact "complementary."

Put in a plug for his own "certificate tax plan" which, he said, would give the farmers income equality without interfering with foreign trade.

Both Hull and Wallace clashed repeatedly with Republican members, who aimed a barrage of hostile questions. Blunt questions brought caustic answers as the Republican attack on the program intensified.

Says Farmers Were Tricked

Wallace charged that farmers especially had been used by industrial interests in fighting the trade program. He declared the last two Republican tariff acts (1922 and 1930) "were supposed to give relief to the farmers by eliminating foreign competition."

"Actually, in both instances, the industrial interests which have long fattened on tariff protection seized the opportunity to boost their own tariff walls," he said. "The net result, especially in the case of the Smoot-Hawley tariff, was great injury to the farmers through the loss of a large portion of their foreign markets."

Representative Treadway remarked that L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange, was one farm leader who opposed the program, and declared he "put it over" Assistant Secretary of State Grady in a public debate.

"I'll tell you why," replied Wallace. "Because he hopes, if the Republicans come in, to become Secretary of Agriculture. It is a subconscious motive perhaps."

"Perhaps that's why you want to

Byrd Ship Arrives At Little America

The North Star, flagship of the Byrd expedition, arrived at Little America yesterday, a message received by the Navy said.

The expedition found the Bay of Whales filled with ice and no available landing place for their snow cruiser. The ship put to sea again and landed in Kainan Bay, some distance away. The Bear, the report said, was three days behind the North Star, struggling through the ice floes.

Martin Admitted Taking Ford Money, NLRB Inquiry Told

Former U. A. W. Aide Swears Bennett Paid A. F. L. Chief

By John B. Oakes

Homer Martin, president of the A. F. of L. faction of the United Automobile Workers of America, was quoted as saying he had received money from a high official of the Ford Motor Co. in a document placed in the record of a House investigating committee yesterday.

Setting off a bombshell at the end of a quiet day, Edmund M. Toland, counsel for the Smith committee investigating the NLRB, produced from files of the board an affidavit charging that Martin said "on several occasions" that he had taken money from Harry Bennett, Ford personnel director.

The affidavit, signed by Harry A. Elder, who said he had been bodyguard for Martin from March to June of last year, is understood to have been filed with the board last September by representatives of the C. I. O.

Elder's statement charged Martin had said "that Ford had promised to 'go along' with him and to give him financial help. . . . He told me that . . . if it were not for Ford, he,

Martin, wouldn't be able to get along and run the union."

Meanwhile, from Detroit the Associated Press reported that Bennett emphatically denied that any promise of financial help had been made

Allen Urges Installment Income Tax

Act Calls for Whole Of D. C. Levy to Be Paid on March 15

Payment of the District's new income tax on the installment plan instead of by one lump sum payment as now provided by law was indorsed yesterday by Commissioner George E. Allen.

"If it can be worked out, I would like to see it be made possible for the taxpayer to pay the tax in two installments as in other District levies," he said.

Under the income tax act the entire payment must be made by March 15, based on the 1939 taxable year. The first District tax measure worked out last year contained provisions ordered by the Congressional committee for payments in October, 1939, and April, 1940, based on the tax year of 1938.

Under the present plan, the total District income tax in March would be added to the regular Federal income tax and the second-half payments on real estate and tangible personal property taxes. On April 1, automobile taxes and fees become due.

When the bill providing for District revenues reached the Senate last June, the income levy was stricken from the tax bill and the business privilege tax substituted. When the bill went to conference, however, the income levy was put in again, but this time it was stated

Taylor Confers With Roosevelt, Hull and Welles

Myron C. Taylor, appointed by President Roosevelt as his personal emissary to the Vatican to work for peace, stopped at the White House for luncheon yesterday en route to Florida.

He declined afterward to comment on the conference, which was attended by Secretary of State Hull and Undersecretary Welles.

Taylor said he did not know when he would go abroad. He is going to Florida for a two weeks' rest from an operation.

The President said at his press conference yesterday that his peace ideals had not crystallized into the form of concrete suggestions.

Falls Church Man Killed by Hit-Run Car

D. C. Pedestrian Dies Of Injuries, Third Traffic Victim in 1940

Two pedestrians were killed by automobiles yesterday in and near the District, one by a hit-run car, and several were injured. The death in Washington was the third this year.

Clyde Poole, 47, a laborer of Falls Church, Va., was struck down at Great Falls and West streets in Falls Church last night by an automobile which failed to stop. Poole died on the way to Georgetown Hospital.

Hugh D. Cooke, 50, of 208 Massachusetts avenue northeast, suffered internal injuries and a fractured skull when he was struck by an automobile operated, police said, by George E. Lister, 44, of Benning. Cooke died a short time after the accident. He was on his way home from work at the navy yard when he was hit. Lister, it was said, will appear before a coroner's jury at an inquest this week. Last year's traffic toll at this time was four.

Another man was in critical condition at Gallinger Hospital, suffering from exposure, three persons were injured in sledding accidents or by falls on icy streets and a man and his wife were hurt when their automobile skidded into a ditch.

The weather, on which most of yesterday's mishaps were blamed, was expected to continue cloudy today with slightly lower temperatures. The thermometer was expected to hover near 35 early this morning, 3 degrees above yesterday's low of 32 at 3 a. m. and 4 degrees below the high of 39 at 4 p. m.

The State steamer McLane and Coast Guard cutter, McLean were sent to Oxford, Md., yesterday to open Easton Bay after cutting a channel through the Choptank River to open Cambridge, Md., on the Eastern Shore and freeing oyster boats bottled up there.

In Washington Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Nemeth, of 1600 Newton street northwest, 27 and 23 respectively, escaped with cuts and bruises when their car ran into a ditch on Chain Bridge road about two miles beyond Chain Bridge. Both were treated at Georgetown Hospital.

Marlene Buck, 5, of 910 Third street northwest, suffered lacerations of the head and face when Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 12.—Actress Joan Bennett and Walter Wanger, producer, were married in the courthouse basement today after a proposal by telephone and an all-night elopement trip which astonished even Hollywood.

Wanger, 45, called Miss Bennett, 29, from his studio last night, and they decided to elope.

Stopping only long enough to pick up Margaret Ettinger, Miss Bennett's press representative, they started for Phoenix by automobile. After their arrival Wanger had to buy a wedding ring. Shortly before noon they obtained a marriage license, then hurried to Justice of the Peace Harry Westfall's office.

The marriage, third for Miss Bennett and second for Wanger, culminated a friendship of five years, but Hollywood was not prepared for their wedding.

The bride, once a blonde but now a brunette, formerly was under contract to Wanger's organization.

Wanger was divorced last spring from Justice Johnstone, dancer and actress, whom he had married 18 years before.

Miss Bennett, daughter of Richard Bennett of stage and screen, first was married at 17 to John Fox, whom she divorced in 1928. In 1931 she married Gene Markey, screen writer, but they were divorced in 1937. Markey later married Hedy Lamarr.

Miss Bennett is the mother of two daughters, Diane, by her first marriage, and Melinda Markey, by her second.

Mine Yields 27 Dead, Hope Lost for 65

Men Had No Chance To Barricade Selves Against Poison Gas, Official Declares

By Leo Disher,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Bartley, W. Va., Jan. 12.—Hope was abandoned tonight for the entombed men in the blast-swept Bartley No. 1 mine, and company officials put the death toll at 92, the worst mine disaster in the Nation since 1928.

Raymond E. Salvati, vice president of the Pond Creek Pocahontas Coal Corporation, who had led rescue crews day and night in their efforts to reach the trapped men, issued this statement:

"We have penetrated far enough to justify our thoughts that there was no possibility that the men barricaded themselves (against explosion gases). They are all dead. They would be dead even if they had barricaded themselves. There is insufficient air."

65 Still Missing

The rescue squads found 27 mangled bodies in the wrecked corridors 600 feet underground, leaving 65 still missing. Only three bodies had been identified, but relatives of the trapped men started preparations to bury their kin.

The bodies, many of them badly mangled, were being brought to the bottom of the shaft and placed in rows for identification.

Officials reported at midnight the rescue crews again were encountering "bad air" in the "fourth left" area and that operations were painfully slow. They said it was unlikely any of the bodies would be brought out before daylight.

E. B. McCue, principal of the Bartley Junior High School, which dismissed classes Tuesday and today, was named chairman of a committee to canvass families of the victims as to their preference for individual or mass funeral services.

The crowd about the rope barricades at the pit had thinned perceptibly tonight.

The company at first had fixed the total of trapped men at 91, but a recount of work records showed 92 were caught when the blast ripped through the mine Wednesday. Forty-seven others escaped unharmed.

Not since 195 were killed in the Mather (Pa.) mine explosion of 1928 has the death toll in a mine disaster been higher. The all-time record is 361 killed in the Monongah (W. Va.) explosion of 1907.

Families to Get Checks

Gov. Homer A. Holt and representatives of the workmen's compensation office came here to aid in the settlement of compensation claims and the company announced the victims' pay checks—due tomorrow—would be distributed to the families.

Until 4 a. m. today the company had held hopes of finding 50 or 60 of the miners alive, but the crews broke through then to the center of the blast area and found five bodies. That meant, crew leaders said, that all in the area probably had been killed instantly.

Salvati said 41 of the men apparently had been trapped far back in the "Main 6" heading, a tunnel leading horizontally from the perpendicular shaft; 49 in two entryways branching from the heading; and two close to the shaft. The cause of the explosion has not been determined.

House Votes $264,000,000 For Defense

Congress Leaders Split on Plans to Expand Navy; Walsh Disputes Vinson

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The House yesterday overwhelmingly approved a $264,611,967 outlay for emergency increases in the Nation's defense forces, as a split developed between Congressional leaders on plans for naval expansion.

Funds to pay for Army-Navy increases ordered by President Roosevelt after the war started in September were indorsed with only a few scattered nays, in the first national defense test of the session. The measure now goes to the Senate.

Chairman Walsh of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, renewing his plea that warships now authorized be constructed before "another paper navy" is approved by Congress, charged that not one ship of the 20 per cent naval increase authorized in 1938 had yet been laid down.

Takes Issue With Vinson

He took issue with a declaration of Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee that construction has been started on all but nine of the 46-ship enlargement then approved and quoted a Navy Department memorandum in support of his stand.

While the controversy deals with the rather academic question of whether naval vessels laid down since 1938 were "replacements" of old ships becoming "overage" or were newly authorized craft, many in Congress see a real issue developing which may possibly block the new $1,300,000,000 authorization bill.

Demands More Money Now

"The crucial question now," Walsh said last night, "is not authorized limits—not paper ships—but appropriations and construction. If our national defense requires further acceleration of our naval building program, which I favor—that question should be presented to Congress in the form of supplemental estimates for more money."

Walsh's demand for "more appropriations now" for naval construction would boost the total national budget beyond the legal debt limit and upset Administration fiscal plans.

At yesterday's House Naval Committee hearing on the 25 per cent increase, Representative Hess (Republican), of Ohio, questioned Admiral Stark, chief of naval operations, on an earlier statement that the Navy planned to lay down its unused warship tonnage "at once." He wanted to know why more ships had not been asked in the 1941 budget.

In reply Stark indicated that the Navy's proposals for immediate construction of ships had been curtailed by Administration budget restrictions.

Urging approval of the expansion bill, which would authorize an additional 107 ships of all types, Stark said the Navy may ask amendment of the measure to permit construction of larger cruisers.

He said the Navy's lawyers believe the old treaty restrictions may limit the size of new cruisers to

Used as Pawn in WPA Test, Needy Woman Gets a Job

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

A Republican Congressman sent a reputedly destitute woman to see Paul Edwards, District WPA administrator, yesterday to ascertain whether his "office is always open" and found it was.

As an aftermath to another spat over Edwards on the House floor Representative McDowell (Republican), of Pennsylvania, sent an "emergency case" to Edwards.

She was Mrs. Helen Elizabeth Gimesky, of 48 Independence avenue southwest, whose husband is seriously ill of tuberculosis and who has a 3-year-old daughter to support. Carrying a letter from McDowell, she was received personally by Edwards and virtually assured a job.

If she is found eligible as to need today, Edwards said, she will be put to work at once in a health institute to be launched next week, as she has had experience in clinics and hospitals.

WPA officials were quick to declare that every emergency case is handled with similar alacrity, and that Mrs. Gimesky was given no preferred treatment because she was sponsored by a Congressman.

Earlier McDowell had told the House during a brief debate over the Edwards case:

"I have dug up a needy citizen of the Nation, and I shall forthwith send him to the District WPA office with the child-like faith that the administrator's generous offer includes representatives holding the Republican philosophy of government."

Later he told newspapermen that he had determined that Mrs. Gimesky is a bona fide resident of Washington, but added, "I did not want to inquire as to her politics."

McDowell said if she were not taken care of promptly he would raise a rumpus.

Edwards was defended when the House session opened by Representative Connery (Democrat), of Massachusetts, where the WPA administrator had previously worked.

"I have enjoyed a fine friendship with Paul Edwards for several

Both Parties in Congress Shy At Taking Lead on Finn Aid

McNary Says Formulation of Program Is Up to President but Pledges Nonpartisan Action; Barkley Says Help Will Be Needed

By William V. Nessly.
Post Staff Writer

Both Republicans and Democrats last night in effect declined President Roosevelt's suggestion that Congressional leaders of the two parties work out a program of assistance to Finland.

Senate Minority Leader McNary said it is the function of the executive department to present such a program. If the President submits legislation laying down a plan to help Finland, McNary said, he felt he could promise "nonpartisan" consideration.

Senate Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, said he did not think Congress should take the initiative "unless its proposals meet with the approval of the Executive and the Department of State," which he said know best how such a program "would fit into our foreign policy."

Among questions that would arise, he said, was whether, if a loan were granted to Finland, this country would not be obligated to extend similar aid to other countries that have been victims of aggression.

"A great many people say that we should aid the Finns because they have paid their debts," Barkley remarked. "I do not think we should put our friendship on such a mercenary basis."

Barkley said he agreed with Mr. Roosevelt that there should be no partisanship in dealing with the question, adding that "whatever is done should be done with the cooperation of all; there should be no attempt to gain a political advantage by anyone."

House Minority Leader Martin said any plan for bi-partisan action on the Finnish question is "news to me." Less emphatic than McNary, the Massachusetts Representative said he thought all precedents should be examined carefully before

Turks Reported Helping Italy Unify Balkans

Believed Urging Bulgaria to Shelve Claim on Rumania

By the Associated Press

Ankara, Jan. 12.—Turkey is marching with Italy in a diplomatic campaign to unify southeastern Europe against "danger of aggression," presumably from Russia, a source close to the Turkish government said tonight.

This informant compared a Sofia talk yesterday between Turkish foreign office representatives and Bulgarian Premier Klosseivanoff with the Hugranian-Italian conversations in Venice last week at which the latter two were reported to have reached agreement on a defensive alliance.

The Turkish - Bulgarian diplomatic activity tied in closely both with the Venetian conference and with a secret meeting two days ago between King Carol of Rumania and Regent Paul of Yugoslavia, presumably on Rumanian-Yugoslav participation in an Italian-sponsored neutral front in southeast Europe.

Numan, Menemenjoglu, Turkish foreign affairs general secretary, was reported to have urged Bulgaria to moderate or shelve for the time being her claim on Rumania for war-lost Dobrujba, in the same manner that Italy persuaded Hungary to defer her demand on the Bucharest government for revision of the Transylvania frontier.

Menemenjoglu stopped in Sofia en route home after conclusion of British - French - Turkish financial agreements.

Turkish political leaders generally hailed Italy's attitude as "unambiguous opposition to Soviet enterprise in the Danube basin or the Balkans."

Italians Sent Through Paris To Join Finns

Blocked in Germany, War Materials and Men Are Rerouted

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Jan. 12.—Both material aid and man power is being passed through France to the aid of Finland.

From official sources it was learned today that volunteers from southeastern Europe and arms from private firms, which were refused passage through Germany, are being rerouted through France.

It is understood a considerable quantity of the war material is being ordered from Italian firms. There are some Italian volunteers and a considerable number from other countries in southeastern Europe.

Material also is being sent to Finland from Spain. Some of this may be German, since at the close of the Spanish conflict there was a surplus. Among this material there is a certain amount of Russian manufacture, captured at the end of the Spanish War.

It is repeated here that material

Britain Is at War With Russia Now, Duff Cooper Says

Detroit, Jan. 12 (INS).—That England and France will win eventually, that Germany will drive through Holland or Belgium in the spring, but that there is little chance for peace this year, were among the predictions today of the Right Hon. Alfred Duff Cooper, former first lord of the British admiralty.

"I consider that England is now at war with Russia, or will be shortly," he added. "Germany will have to move in the spring. I am convinced Hitler had intended to move through Holland or Belgium last fall, but was dissuaded by his army."

Navy Torpedo Planes Collide; 'Chutes Save Three; One Dead

By the Associated Press

San Diego, Calif., Jan. 12.—One man was dead, three safe and two missing after a head-on collision of two Navy torpedo planes over barren Borego Canyon, 75 miles east of here, Eleventh Naval District officials reported tonight.

A searching party of more than 50 ranchers and sheriff's deputies from San Diego and Imperial counties was spread fan-wise across the desert near the crash scene, seeking the two missing men.

Two of the survivors, Elmer Edwin Jackson, 22, Hendersonville, N. C., radioman third class, and another whose name was not given, were reported safe at a highway repair station, 15 miles from the nearest telephone, in the canyon.

Naval officials said word telephoned from the two men indicated one man was dead in the wreckage of the planes and that two other men were seen to parachute out of the planes, but had failed to find their way to habitations.

Fearing they might have been injured in the parachute landing, officials sent naval ambulances with the salvage crew from North Island Naval Air Station.

The third survivor of the crash, Charles W. Post, 24, Troutdale, Oreg., radioman second class, was reported suffering from shock

Pilots of the planes were Ensign Harold Nathan Funk, U. S. N. R., and Ensign Walter Glenn Barnes, jr., U. S. N. R., naval officials said. The other members of the two crews were James Addison Crowson, radioman first class, acting as second pilot in Ensign Funk's plane, and Paul Eugene Dickson, aviation machinist's mate, second class.

Bad Day in the Air

By Wade Werner,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Helsinki, Jan. 12.—Russia's air force today subjected southern Finland to one of the heaviest bombings in the month-and-a-half of war, breaking Helsinki's telephone communications with the outside world and punishing a dozen other cities.

The violent attacks came a day after a Soviet attempt to land parachute troops on the Karelian Isthmus was reported to have ended in mass death in the air.

Lahti, 60 miles north of the capital, reported the heaviest damage. The radio station in this important railway junction was put out of commission.

Thirty planes raided Turku (Abo), southwestern seaport through which much foreign material and many volunteers for Finland are passing. Other cities along the Gulf of Bothnia were pounded.

Rail Junction Hit

Bombs which broke Helsinki's telephone connections fell on islands some 30 miles south of the capital. Vibrations were felt here. Riihimaki, a rail junction 40 miles north of Helsinki, also was bombed.

Air raid sirens screamed in Helsinki at 7:15 a. m. E. S. T. for 1 hour and 35 minutes. No planes were sighted over the city itself, but the Russian bombers ranged over a wide section of southern Finland.

Finnish marksmen on the isthmus were reported to have frustrated the attempt to land groups of the Red army's parachute corps by picking them off as they dangled from 'chute shouds.

Scandinavian newspaper correspondents said several groups of 50 in parachutes were wiped out as they floated to death in yesterday's twilight.

While workers set about repairing the capital's shattered long-distance lines, war correspondents with Finland's Arctic army reported that the Russians had begun a twin attack from the Salla and Petsamo fronts, seeking again to penetrate Finland from the icy north.

So far, however, they managed to build strong fortifications in only one Salla district town in the north. Southward to below Suomussalmi, in Finland's narrow waistline, the frontier is clear of any appreciable enemy forces.

Hitler Reported Intervening

Copenhagen, Jan. 12 (INS).—Adolf Hitler was reported tonight to be exerting diplomatic pressure on Josef Stalin to halt Russia's war against Finland and thus stop the drain on Russian material needed by Germany in her war with the Allies. Stalin reportedly desires to continue the conflict.

This report reached Copenhagen from Moscow amid indications that Stalin is widening his purge to include industrial and political chieftains as well as army officers.

Devaluation Called Factor In Gold Influx

9-Billion Inflow Is Discussed by E. A. Goldenweiser

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer

The advance in the price of gold due to devaluation of the dollar in 1934 has been a factor in the influx of $9,700,000,000 of foreign gold in the last six years, E. A. Goldenweiser, research chief of the Federal Reserve Board, declared yesterday.

Gold has not entered the country, he said, because the Treasury has paid more for it. One of the reasons for the inflow, however, he said, has been "the general rise in the currency prices of gold throughout the world." The rise in currency prices followed devaluation of the dollar and the boost in the Treasury's price from $20.67 to $35 per ounce.

"These higher prices for gold are important," Goldenweiser declared, "because they have resulted in an increased production of gold, and have made it possible for foreign countries to send great quantities of gold to the United States without suffering reductions in their gold reserves to a point where they had to impose exchange restrictions."

Capital Frightened

Other "complex economic influences" responsible for the unprecedented influx, he said, have been political uncertainties and rearmament programs, frightening capital to this country, and business developments in this country and abroad.

The $17,600,000,000 in gold now held by the Treasury, representing about 60 per cent of the central reserve gold holdings of the world, Goldenweiser declared, "is of little value." The future value, he declared, is "unpredictable."

His remarks were contained in a review of the gold problem in the January issue of the Federal Reserve bulletin.

Bank deposits, the bulletin said, reached at the close of 1939 an all-time high of $64,400,000,000, or about $500 for every man, woman and child in the country. The total is about $9,000,000,000 in excess of the 1929 peak. Deposits increased by about $5,300,000,000 in 1939.

Deficit Finance a Factor

Heavy gold imports and continued large-scale deficit financing by the Government were the main factors in the increase in deposits.

The gold problem, Goldenweiser said, divides into two main phases, the consequent excessive bank reserves and the accumulation, in exchange for goods and services and other forms of wealth, of a metallic asset of uncertain value.

He pointed out that excess reserves of Federal Reserve member banks have jumped to the unprecedented total of $5,000,000,000, thereby making it impossible for the board to prevent an injurious inflation by use of its credit brakes.

"Before the reserves created by the inflow of gold are brought under control," he said, "new means for exercising such control will have to be devised and adopted."

There is no simple solution for the gold problem, however, he declared. It likely will "stay with us for a long while," he said, and may increase if the gold influx continues.

Typist Ends 57 Years Believing She Never Has Misspelled Word

Mrs. Mary Cowell, 79, and still typing

Mrs. Mary Cowell, at 79, Still Turns Out Copy While Consulting Battered Dictionary To Be Sure Record of Accuracy Is Maintained

By Scott Hart
Post Staff Writer

The millions of words, important and unimportant, that rushed through the typewriter of Mrs. Mary Cowell, Washington's dean of typists, kept adding up yesterday while she crossed her fifty-seventh year in the business.

Mrs. Cowell is 79 and she doesn't believe she ever has misspelled a word in her copy. She wore out a dictionary to keep from misspelling. Its frayed leaves, yellowing, show where her fingers have been along.

The old look of the battered dictionary fits into the mellowness of the office, that is as unlike other offices in her building as a modern feminine pillbox hat is unlike a Paisley shawl.

The picture of a Civil War brigadier general, her father, hangs on the wall. There is a comfortable wicker rocking chair where guests can sit down, and a feeling in the office that they needn't hurry.

And Mrs. Cowell, a tiny woman with gray hair molded into a knot back of her head, and with a suggestion of lace and an old brooch about her, sits behind a desk that would engage lovers of old office furniture. Her typewriter is of a model that the manufacturer doesn't remember any more, but Mrs. Cowell said yesterday: "The manufacturers don't make really fine typewriters like the now. It has that old-fashioned big wide ribbon and such smooth keys. I wouldn't have a new one."

Mrs. Cowell isn't interested in old things, she says, except when they work best or give old-fashioned looks to modern and efficient offices. She wouldn't talk of old typewriters. But she recalls that when she began typing, back in 1883, in Ithaca, N. Y., her family and friends were aghast at the thought of it. The bosses then called the typists "typewriters," and would laugh when they said, "I bought a new ribbon for my typewriter today."

So, determined to make a career of typing, Mrs. Cowell went to work for a typewriter manufacturer and was transferred to Washington when she was 23, to demonstrate the sensational devices. She went into business a year later.

Of the so-called modern stenographer, she has had no reason to investigate them or their technique, for she was efficient and got good busines all along. Her speed increased and clients remained loyal. They liked to step into the old-fashionedness of her office, where words always were spelled right.

Of course, she said yesterday, the years have been so many that many of her loyal clients have died off, thus affecting business. Three passed away last year. And this happens while she and the typewriter are just as efficient as ever, not even feeling the scrape of years except when an old and valued client doesn't call by with his copy any more.

Labor Factions' Legislative Agenda Widely Divergent

By Russell Turner,
United Press Staff Writer.

The Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor last night presented to Congress widely divergent 1940 legislative programs, but they agreed on two issues—that the United States must keep out of war and that unemployment is the No. 1 domestic problem.

They were diametrically opposed with respect to the Wagner act. The C. I. O. praised it as "one of the greatest achievements for organized labor" and urged adoption of three strengthening amendments. The federation assailed the "biased (Labor) Board" and demanded its abolition, with a new five-man board to replace it.

The C. I. O. asked amendments to provide criminal penalties for violations of the act, to bar awarding of Government contracts to violators, and to prohibit the NLRB "from carving up any industrial units established by the industrial unions of the C. I. O." The federation urged enactment of the Walsh-Barden amendments to change the board, permit workers to choose their own bargaining units, and "check the present tendency of the board to attempt to shape the form and character of the trade-union movement."

Green Sees Committee

The C. I. O.'s program was transmitted by John L. Lewis, who sent identical letters to each Congressman. A. F. L. President William Green sent up the federation agenda after meeting with his legislative committee.

Both programs recommended expansion of the Government's housing programs, but the federation also demanded that payment of prevailing wages be made a requisite for granting of Government aid to any such projects.

$60-at-60 Urged

Both programs urged expansion of the social security program. The C. I. O., however, urged adoption of its $60-at-60 plank, standardization of unemployment compensation regulations, and use of all social security collections for benefit payments instead of for creation of a reserve fund. The federation urged establishment of an advisory council to recommend improvements in the program, enactment of health insurance legislation, and standardization of unemployment compensation regulations.

Relative to unemployment, the federation declared its unwillingness to "tolerate the idea of permanent unemployed," and recommended creation of a national advisory council to coordinate restoration of idle plants to operation to absorb unemployed, extension of the six-hour day and five-day week, restoration of the prevailing wage principle to all relief projects, creation of a permanent public works program, and "an adequate appropriation" for relief.

The C. I. O. called for convocation of "the responsible leaders from the Government, industry, labor and agriculture, who should be commandeered by the Government to work at this problem until some concrete plans have been formulated" and appropriation of sufficient funds to give work relief jobs for at least 3,000,000 persons. It also recommended expansion of the National Youth Administration program "to employ all young people who are out of work and out of school."

Lauds Dies Committee

Other points in the federation's program:

Continuation of the Dies Committee, whose "splendid work . . . in exposing the subversive activities of Communist, Nazi and Fascist organizations" brought on A. F. of L. praise.

No weakening of immigration laws.

Extension of the Walsh-Healey Government contracts act.

Legislation to improve working conditions of Federal employes.

Other C. I. O. points were:

Extension of the wage-hour act and expansion of its administration.

Enactment of a Government health program, including a Federal hospital-building program, expansion of the public health service, establishment of a medical care program for lower-paid brackets, and authorization of a Labor Department industrial disease control program.

Revision of the Government's tax set-up to eliminate so-called "consumer taxes" and substitution for them of excess profits taxes, increased inheritance and gift impositions, and elimination of tax exemption for Government securities.

Gen. Short Named to Lead Greatest Peacetime Army Unit

EMBICK KRUEGER SHORT

Three Divisions to Take Part in Record Maneuvers in South Next Spring; Will Face Cavalry; Infantry Headed by Krueger

Selection of Brig. Gen. Walter C. Short, commander of the First Division, to head the first complete Army corps in American peacetime history, was revealed yesterday by War Department officials.

Short, a non-West Pointer, was picked over some 20-odd superiors for the greatest troop command ever to be set up under peace conditions. He will head the unit, to consist of the First, Fifth and Sixth Divisions and supplementary troops, in maneuvers in the South this spring.

At the same time, it became known that Maj. Gen. Walter Krueger, Second Division commander, will be named chief of a provisional corps to be organized to combat Short's outfit in the war games.

To Involve 60,000

Lieut. Gen. Stanley D. Embick will be director of the exercises and serve as commander of the Nation's first peacetime field army during the period.

The mass maneuvers, greatest ever held in the United States, will involve some 60,000 troops. They were ordered by President Roosevelt to whip scattered Army units into a first-class fighting team.

Gen. Krueger's provisional corps will be predominantly cavalry, officials expect. It probably will include the First Cavalry Division, the mechanized cavalry brigade from Fort Knox, Ky., the Second Infantry Division, and two cavalry and two infantry regiments now concentrated near Fort Robinson, Ark.

Krueger Commanded Fort Meade

Krueger, chief of the A. E. F. Tank Corps, is a native of Germany. He is a former enlisted man, and was assistant chief of staff here from 1936 to 1938 and commander of nearby Fort Meade until last March.

Gen. Short, a 59-year-old native of Illinois, entered the Army in 1902 from civil life. He participated in the Mexican border campaign in 1916 and served in France during most of the World War, seeing action at St. Mihiel, Aisne-Marne and Meuse-Argonne.

His command in the maneuvers will be predominantly infantry, and is expected to include most of the Army's tanks.

Lieut. Gen. Embrick is a former deputy chief of Army staff and war plans director. He is a veteran of the Spanish-American War and in 1918 was chief of staff of the American section of the Supreme Allied War Council.

Poll Shows Writers Favor Third Term, End of Dies Quiz

Authors More Pro-Democratic Than General Public, Less Inclined to Blame War on Nazis, and Against U. S. Entry

Special Dispatch to The Post

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 12.—A special poll of more than 200 leading American authors indicates strong sentiment among the writing fraternity for a Democratic victory in the next election, a third term for President Roosevelt, discontinuation of the Dies Committee and keeping America out of war.

These are some of the results of a survey conducted by the Saturday Review of Literature, in collaboration with the American Institute of Public Opinion, among a list of 400 leading writers picked by the Saturday Review.

More than 200 responded to the poll, which was conducted by the Saturday Review "in the belief that writers are in the forefront of those who influence public opinion, and that the record of their views on leading issues is valuable." The ballot consisted of questions used in recent months by the American Institute in its surveys of national public opinion.

A comparison of the vote of authors with the vote of the public on the same question shows that the authors are considerably more pro-Democratic than the public at large. Whereas only 54 per cent of voters throughout the Nation said they want the Democrats to win the next election, 70 per cent of the authors said they wished to see a Democratic victory.

A slight majority of authors (53 per cent) favor a Roosevelt third term, according to the authors' poll, whereas the American Institute's national poll finds the public opposed by a slight majority (54 per cent).

The attitude of authors toward the Dies Committee differs sharply from the public's attitude. Writers in the poll voted approximately 6 to 4 for discontinuing the Dies Committee, whereas the public's vote is more than 3 to 1 in favor of continuing the committee.

The comparative study also found the authors much less inclined than the public to blame Germany for starting the present European war. Both authors and the public agree, however, by very nearly the same majority that the United States should not go to war abroad.

Device Broadcasts Maps to Planes

New York, Jan. 12 (AP).—The invention of a radio facsimile machine designed to deliver weather maps and other information to airlines in flight was announced tonight by a former American naval officer, W. G. H. Finch.

It is capable of reproducing sketches, typewritten orders and handwriting at a rate of about 150 words a minute, and also can be used for plane-ground communication in wartime. While radio facsimile reproduction between land stations is no longer a novelty, the device is the first to employ both sending and receiving apparatus in an airplane.

Batt to Head U. S. Council For Business

Commerce Dept. Group Elects Him to Succeed Harriman

By the Associated Press

William L. Batt, Philadelphia manufacturer, yesterday was elected chairman of the Commerce Department's business advisory council.

He succeeds W. Averell Harriman, railroad executive.

Batt, president of S. K. F. Industries, announced the council's efforts to promote cooperation and understanding between business and Government would be continued.

He was convinced, he said, that "the Government does not regard all businessmen as highbinders" and that businessmen generally conceded much merit and "intelligence" to Government policies.

Relations Better

Relations between business and Government have improved substantially in the last three years, he added. Three years ago, he said, fellow manufacturers scorned him for saying a kind word about the Government but recently the National Association of Manufacturers recognized the need for cooperation with governments as one of its important purposes.

On the other hand, he continued, changing Government attitude was illustrated by the fact that businessmen appearing before the Monopoly Committee recently found that they were treated "rather more considerately than they expected."

Vice Chairmen Named

As business advisory chairman, Batt heads a group of nearly 60 of the country's top industrialists and financiers.

Two new vice chairmen also were named yesterday. They were Harvey Couch, of Pine Bluff, Ark., utility and railroad executive and former director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and John D. Biggers, of Toledo, president of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co., who directed the Government's postcard unemployment census of two years ago. They succeeded William L. Clayton, of Houston, Tex., and Batt.

Two other vice chairmen re-elected were M. R. Folsom, treasurer of the Eastman Kodak Co., and Clarence Francis, president of General Foods Corporation.

Marden Lectures On Snakes, Coffee And Orchids Here

Snakes, orchids, coffee and mountains made up a 90-minute pictorial survey of South America presented last night by Luis Marden, National Geographic Society staff photographer, before 3,500 persons in Constitution Hall.

With movies in natural color, Marden carried his audience through Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina, Venezula, Columbia and Trinidad. The pictures, made between January and April of last year, are the most recent pictorial record of those countries.

Highlight of the show was the famous snake farm of São Paulo, Brazil, where antisnake bite serum is made from venom. The supply of snakes is provided by the residents of the country round about Sao Paulo, Marden explained. They are given a bottle of the serum for every four snakes they bring to the farm, he said.

Marden was aided in his tour by W. Robert Moore and Maynard Owen Williams, of the Latin-American staff of the National Geographic Society.

SEN. BRIDGES

He disclosed yesterday his intention to introduce legislation to make the last Thursday of November Thanksgiving Day. If that fails, he intends to seek approval of a measure to make the last Thursday of November Thanksgiving Day for the District of Columbia.

If the latter bill were passed, he said, no Presidential proclamation similar to the one by President Roosevelt last year could be issued changing the date for observation of a day originally set aside by the Pilgrims of New England.

The House yesterday accepted Senate changes in the Jenkins bill granting to Ohio $1,338,160 of social security funds withheld in a controversy between the Social Security Board and the State in 1938.

Chairman Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona, of the Senate Judiciary Committee, appointed subcommittees to study a half dozen judicial nominations, as follows:

John C. Mahoney, of Rhode Island, to be judge of the First Federal Circuit Court of Appeals—Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, chairman; Van Nuys (Democrat), Indiana, and Austin (Republican), Vermont.

Armistead M. Doble, of Virginia, to be judge of the Fourth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals—Neely (Democrat), West Virginia; Borah (Republican), Idaho, and Hughes (Democrat), Delaware.

George A. Malcolm, to be attorney general in Puerto Rico—King (Democrat), Utah, chairman; Austin (Republican), Vermont, and Burke (Democrat), Nebraska.

Representative Hoffman (Republican), Michigan, invited the House to visit the special committee investigating the Labor Board and take a look at the board's women lawyers who have been testifying.

"You can tell," Hoffman said from the floor, "that they haven't changed a diaper or hung out a washing."

Wheeler Gets Lewis Praise In Speech Bid

C.I.O. Chief Describes Senator as 'Eminent Statesman' in Letter

Indications that John L. Lewis is preparing to support the Presidential candidacy of Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, increased yesterday when Lewis, head of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, invited Wheeler to address the convention of the United Mine Workers in Columbus, Ohio, January 23.

Lewis praised Wheeler in his invitation.

"Recognizing you as one of the most eminent of our contemporary statesmen," he wrote, "many of our members have expressed a wish that you be invited to deliver an address to the convention. In recognition of this sentiment, I am therefore formally extending you an invitation to deliver such an address upon such public questions as you may consider germane."

Lewis added that "I know that among the delegates you will meet many personal friends whose confidence you have retained throughout the years of your public service."

Two months ago, Wheeler's unannounced candidacy was given considerable impetus by a deliberate gesture of Lewis in refusing to send delegates to a Salt Lake City, Utah, Progressive meeting which had not invited Senator Wheeler. The meeting was reported to be planned to start a "draft Roosevelt" movement.

The United Mine Workers actively supported President Roosevelt in 1936 and promised a half million dollars in contributions and loans for the Democratic campaign fund.

However, the relationship between Lewis and the President came on evil days when Mr. Roosevelt failed to support the C. I. O. as Lewis wished during the "little steel" strike. Lewis also has criticized the Administration relief policies.

Meanwhile, Senator Bridges (Republican) of New Hampshire, called upon Republicans in his State to send uninstructed delegates to the 1940 Republican National Convention.

Senator Bridges, who is certain to have the New Hampshire delegation for him, announced he intended to file his own declaration as a candidate at large. The New Hampshire primary will be held March 12.

While Republican National Chairman John Hamilton yesterday sent letters to seven cities inviting specific bids for the Republican National Convention, a drive was launched here to have 32-year-old Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota elected as the party's keynoter.

Having received invitations from civic groups in Atlantic City, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis and San Francisco for the G. O. P. nominating convention, Hamilton suggested that they present detailed statements to the February 18 meeting here of the national committee, when the time and place for the convention will be set.

Dr. Fairchild Urges Controls On Spending

C. of C. Economist 'Disappointed' by President's Budget

By the Associated Press

Dr. Fred R. Fairchild, an economist speaking as an official of the United States Chamber of Commerce, asserted yesterday that Congress should set up controls to protect "our economic and political system from the perils of imprudent expenditure policies."

If Government costs were cut to within a few hundred million dollars of a balanced budget, he said, he "would not hesitate to recommend" that business accept additional taxes sufficient to cover the balance.

"Under such conditions," he said, "the encouragement and stimulus given to business from the promised restoration of stability of the national finances would doubtless more than offset the deterring effect of the additional taxes required."

Fairchild, professor of political economy at Yale University, issued his statement as chairman of a chamber of commerce committee on public expenditures and debt.

The economist said that he felt that "assuming a will on the part of the Executive and Congress to balance the budget, it would appear that the means are within their possession."

He termed President Roosevelt's budget estimates "disappointing" in that the philosophy of "overspending is extolled, despite its fallaciousness and mounting danger," and "misleading" in that they "appear to foreshadow some slight decrease in expenditures, although the experience of recent years with such budget estimates clearly suggests no reduction is likely to ensue."

Increased sentiment for diverting the Administration's $460,000,000 special defense request to restoring budget cuts in farm benefits was noted yesterday as Congress bogged down to its customary early-session pace after a spirited start.

Picking up the suggestion of Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, that the emergency defense item be transferred to non-military activities, Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, said:

"It might be possible to cut several hundred million dollars from defense appropriations and use it for farm parity payments. That would make unnecessary any additional taxes for financing farm payments."

Lawyers Argue Trust Action Against Unions

300 of National Guild Hear Horack And Epstein Debate

Department of Justice moves to apply the anti-trust laws against labor unions were given a thorough examination last night in a debate by two legal leaders before 300 members of the National Lawyers Guild, which opened a three-day session at the Carlton Hotel.

Unions which abuse their power to restrain trade and "racketeer" unions should face the same consequences under the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust acts as any business combination, argued Frank E. Horack, jr., Indiana University professor of law.

Congress intended to exempt labor unions from provisions of the anti-trust legislation, insisted Henry Epstein, New York State attorney general. Labor, through Congressional action, has repeatedly beaten back attempts by the courts to apply the anti-labor laws against it, Epstein asserted, and revival of such prosecution now would threaten the union's right to strike, picket, boycott and collectively bargain. The remedy against "racketeer" unions can be found in our anti-racketeering law, the New Yorker said.

"Economic Good" Cited

Prof. Horack pointed out that the Government today is invoking the anti-trust laws "as an agency for the wider distribution of economic good."

"Labor management," Horack said, "is in much the same position as business management, and if it is not alert to police its own organization against both the racketeer and the well-intentioned but overzealous advocate, it must face regulation and limitation as unpleasant to it as similar regulations have been to business.

"There is no evidence to indicate that union activities should be freed from the restrictions of the Sherman act unequivocally. But rather that only those activities which were within permissible labor objectives and were accomplished by permissable means were exempt from the sanctions of the law."

Doesn't Fear Abuses

As for charges that the Department of Justice can in turn abuse any power to prosecute labor unions under the antitrust law, Horack declared that "as long as we have a democratic government, we'll be able to halt the abuses."

Epstein questioned the Department of Justice's ability to deal justly with the intricate questions involving alleged trade restraint by unions. Will the prosecutor now supplant the courts and become a new legislative authority? he asked.

Unions are to be prosecuted under the antitrust laws for being parties to and enforcing graft and extortion.

Invokes Criminal Statutes

"It is a sad day when prosecution cannot stop this by means of criminal and penal statutes," he maintained.

A clash of arguments by Louis B. Boudin labor lawyer and Sylvan Hirsch opposing counsel in the Apex hosiery case in which the company sued the union for a sit-down strike, enlivened the post-debate discussion.

Today's conference sessions will be devoted to analyses of the Norris-LaGuardia and national labor relations acts.

Barman Tried to Buy Pistol On Day of Slaying, Court Told

Ray Barkley (right), bartender at the Green Oak Tavern, Silver Hill, Md., held for the grand jury on a murder charge at Upper Marlboro, Md., yesterday, enters hearing in custody of Sheriff William Clifton

MRS. DELILAH HARDESTY

Held for Grand Jury In Shooting of Tavern Worker in Maryland

Ray W. Barkley, 28, of 1217 Harvard street northwest, bartender at the Green Oak Tavern, Silver Hill, Md., was held for the grand jury on a murder charge at Upper Marlboro yesterday in the fatal shooting of Alfred Downs, 28, handyman at the establishment.

Barkley was lodged in the Upper Marlboro Jail.

At yesterday's preliminary hearing, Judge Walter L. Green heard four witnesses testify that on January 2, the day of the shooting, Barkley tried to borrow a pistol from them to use on a "hunting trip."

Leonard Latimer, proprietor of the King's Park Inn, near Silver Hill, told the court that Downs also had tried to buy a gun on the day of the shooting.

Weapon Identified

"He came into my place," Leonard said, "and said 'I'll give $25 for a gun that will shoot six times.'"

Julius H. Strickland, proprietor of Strick's, another Prince Georges County tavern, identified the fatal weapon, a 45-caliber automatic, as his own, but denied he lent it to Barkley.

He told the court Barkley had asked him for the gun but that he had refused.

"Me and 'Big Jim' want to go on a hunting trip," Strickland quoted Barkley as saying. The witness said he didn't know who "Big Jim" was.

The report of Dr. James I. Boyd, county coroner who conducted the autopsy on Downs, revealed there were six bullet wounds.

Apparently there was no witness to the actual shooting. Sergt. Elon Turner, of the county force, testified, however, that Barkley had admitted to him that he shot Downs after the latter had struck him with the butt of a .22 rifle and had threatened to shoot him.

Patch on Forehead

Barkley wore a large patch on his forehead, covering the wound allegedly inflicted by the rifle butt.

Irby Malloy, colored busboy at the Green Oak, testified he was in the basement when he heard the pistol reports.

"When I got upstairs," he told the court, "I saw the pistol in Barkley's hand and the .22 rifle lying on the floor near Downs. I heard Barkley say he intended to shoot him."

Mrs. Delilah Hardesty, 29, waitress at the Green Oak and friend of the slain man, was in court, but did not testify. Other witnesses said they had seen her with Downs a short time before the shooting.

D.C. Police Grill Trio Arrested In Silver Spring

Clews to Capital Safe Crackings and Burglaries Sought

Three men, arrested in a Silver Spring tavern when police responded to a burglar alarm early yesterday, were charged last night with housebreaking and held in default of $10,000 bond each.

They are Samuel Joseph Hanna, 25, of 3104 Channing street northeast; Harry A. Suit, 25, of 225 H street northeast, and Richard S. Watson, 24, of 221 First street northeast. They were held at the Silver Spring police station.

Washington police, meanwhile, were attempting to link the men with a series of auto thefts and safe crackings in the District during the last three months. They were questioned yesterday for several hours by Lieut. John Fowler and Detective Sergts. E. E. Thompson and J. J. Tolson.

Police were attempting to learn if one of the three was the same man who barely escaped a trap in southeast Washington recently after a gun battle.

This man, police said, was later frightened away from a store on Fourth street southwest. The car in which he escaped was found on the Smithsonian grounds. Inside, police found an acetylene torch and burglar tools.

Sergt. Earl H. Burdine, of the Montgomery County Police, said an acetylene torch was found in the trio's car parked outside the tavern at 9948 Georgia avenue yesterday.

Prince Georges County police last night were searching for bandits who broke into Stewart's Super Service Station at Hyattsville Thursday night and carried off a safe-containing $466.

Three colored men also were being sought for the ohldup of a colored cab driver at Fairmont Heights, Md. The driver was Alvin Jeter, 40, of 306 South Capitol street, who told police he was hailed by the men in Washington. At Fairmont Heights, he said, two of the bandits covered him with pistols while the third took $4 from his pockets.

Mrs. Wheeler, D. C. Switchboard Operator, Dies

Mrs. Viola Wheeler, 45, a switchboard operator at the District Building for 22 years, died last night of a heart attack at her home, 4446 Ellicott street northwest.

A native of Washington, she started work as an employe on the switchboard of the Fire Board, and was transferred to the switchboard of the District. She was on duty during the Knickerbocker Theater disaster.

Surviving are a sister, Mrs. Madeline Hale, with whom she lived, and a niece, Mrs. Dorothy Felker, also of Washington.

Announcing the formation of a mechanized engineer troop at Fort Knox, Ky., the War Department said yesterday that 113 enlisted men at Fort Belvoir, Va., will be moved to the Kentucky post to form the nucleus of the organization.

At the same time, establishment of a new topographical engineer company at Fort Benning, Ga., was ordered, the personnel coming from an engineer battalion at Portland, Oreg.

Killed Girl, 14, In Self-Defense, Trooper Testifies

By the Associated Press

Mauch Chunk, Pa., Jan. 12.—A heavy-shouldered man who once wore the gray of the Pennsylvania State police told today of killing a 14-year-old schoolgirl when she brandished a "pistol" that turned out to be a toy.

He described the victim, a seventh-grade schoolgirl in the nearby mining town of Nesquehoning, as a rouged and painted "young lady" who talked of gangsters and bank holdups and threatened to "blow your—— brains out."

It was Joan's promised "tip" on a robbery plot, Franklin related, that led him to pick her up in a police car.

As the officers pressed her for information about herself and examined with flashlights a map purporting to show a holdup plan, the girl "suddenly pulled a gun," Franklin said, and commanded them to drive her to nearby Lansford. Then followed, he said, the threat to his life.

Dr. Hu has published over 100 poems. Among his other works are "History of Living Chinese Literature," "The Philosophy of Tai Chen" and "An Anthology of Chinese Songs." He has received honorary degrees from Harvard University, the University of Southern California and the University of Hongkong.

Kayser Discusses Trade in Americas

The United States is missing the opportunity for increased trade with Latin America afforded by the European war, Dean Elmer Louis Kayser, of George Washington University, declared yesterday.

The difficulty of arranging trade agreements with Latin-American countries and the lack of capital in those lands account for the missed opportunity, he told 300 high school students at a conference on Pan-American affairs.

Other speakers at the conference were Ernesto Galarza, of the division of intellectual cooperation, Pan American Union, and Prof. James Christopher Corliss, of the university. George Howland Cox, director of the university's Inter-American center, presided.

Liners Planned To Be Usable As Air Carriers

U. S. Soon to Ask Bids On Ships Designed for Guns, Flight Decks

By Leland C. Speers

Copyright by New York Times

Two great ocean liners, different from any ever designed or built, which, in the event of war, would be speedily convertible into naval aircraft carriers, are on the program of the Maritime Commission for construction in the near future, it was learned yesterday.

The ships, which are to be built primarily for the transpacific passenger trade, will each be of about 35,000 tons displacement, and in the event of war each will carry 75 planes, which is the number now carried on the Navy's carriers, the Yorktown and Enterprise.

In appearance the new liners will be different from any before operated in transocean trades. For one thing their funnel arrangement will be the same as employed on modern naval aircraft carriers; that is the funnel or funnels will be on the side, instead of in the center of the vessels.

Design details are a carefully guarded secret as is the speed of the ship, which, however, is expected to be in excess of 30 knots an hour. As in the case of the great carriers with the fleet, the liners will have emplacements for anti-aircraft guns the main antiaircraft equipment to consist of 5-inch guns. The flying decks, which can be quickly put in place, will be more than 700 feet in length.

The design of the ships has been approved by the Navy Department and bids for constructions are expected to be asked by the end of the month. They were described today as warships which in peace time will earn the money necessary to maintain them.

They will be operated by the President lines as passenger and mail carriers and will be the most luxuriously fitted ships yet built for the Pacific trade.

In the course of yesterday's hearing on the Vinson $1,300,000,000 naval expansion bill, Admiral Stark, chief of naval operations, testified the Navy is greatly in need of aircraft carriers. The expansion bill authorizes three such ships each of about 20,000 tons—in other words, sister ships of the Yorktown and Enterprise. This will increase to ten the number of Navy built ships of this category. The new auxiliary carriers will be additional.

For the two Maritime Commission ships no appropriation is necessary, as the money for their construction, which will be a certain percentage of the completed cost, will be supplied from Maritime Commission funds. The cost of the completed ships has not been disclosed.

A.F.L. Hails Ruling Legalizing Strike On 'Import' Goods

American Federation of Labor spokesmen last night hailed a decision of the District Court yesterday which upheld the legality of strikes to prevent employers from importing out-of-town products instead of making their own.

The ruling was applauded in an A. F. of L. statement as a setback to the recent Department of Justice policy of proceeding against labor organizations under the antitrust laws.

Union workmen struck at the bakery of Gundersheimer, Inc., here in 1927, in an effort to prevent their employer from buying bakery goods in Philadelphia. The company sued the union for $300,000, charging unlawful restraint of trade. Justice Jessie C. Adkins dismissed the case yesterday.

"It seems to me that the union's purpose was not unlawful," Adkins commented.

'Rose Bandit' Sentenced

Richard Heck, 20, the "rose bandit," was sentenced to 15 to 18 months in prison yesterday by Justice Peyton Gordon in the District Court. Heck pleaded guilty to charges of looting several places where the burglar left a rose at the time of the robbery.

Two Local Youths Save Eight From Furnace Gas at U. of Va.

Falls Church and Bethesda Students Pull Sleepers From Peril

Two boys from towns near the District were heroes yesterday on the campus of the University of Virginia after rescuing their landlady and seven other students from a gas-filled boarding house.

Though semiconscious themselves after fumes swept through the house from a broken furnace pipe, James H. Littlehale, jr., of Bethesda, Md., and Richard R. Baker 3d, of Falls Church, Va., cleared the house of its occupants. Then Littlehale collapsed on the floor.

When Littlehale woke early yesterday, he saw smoke pouring through a ventilator and staggered to the basement, where he found the landlady, Mrs. A. A. Sizer, on her hands and knees, her ankle broken. He rushed back to his room, awakened Baker and began the rescue while Baker telephoned for help.

Six Found Lying in Hall

Also stricken unconscious was Melvin F. Rahn, of Niles, Mich. Other boarders in the house were Mrs. Sizer's son, Jack; Melvin Newman, of Brookline, Mass.; James Allan, of Montclair, N. J.; Guillermo de Roux, of Panama City; Sewell Biggs, of Middletown, Del., and Bruce Swenson, of Montclair, N. J.

Fire Chief Charles H. Page said that when he arrived in response to Baker's call, about six students were lying apparently lifeless in the hallway and Mrs. Sizer was hysterical in the kitchen, calling upon rescuers to "wake the boys and get them out quickly." The rescue squad of Charlottesville Fire Department administered artificial respiration to those stricken.

Rescuer Collapses

Only one of the six pet cats kept in the house could be found yesterday.

Littlehale later said that when he woke he saw a light in the kitchen and, though hardly able to walk, made his way in that direction.

"I got out of bed and couldn't walk straight," he said. "I staggered into the kitchen and down into the cellar where I saw Mrs. Sizer on her hands and knees on the floor. I ran back upstairs and got Baker. He collapsed when he got out of bed.

"We managed to get Mrs. Sizer to the kitchen with the help of Melvin Newman and then I ran to the second floor to awaken the other boys, while Baker telephoned for a doctor. On my way down, my legs buckled under me and I fell down the steps and fainted by the front door."

Story Trusties Slew Family Starts Inquiry

Fort Towson, Okla., Jan. 12 (AP).—An amazing story of how a farm family of three was killed by gun, ax and fire because of a dice game prompted State officials today to investigate prison camp conditions, including reports that convicts get drunk and go hunting with shotguns.

A frightened farmer, Houston Lambert, 28, signed a statement that he saw three convicts brutally kill Elmer Rogers, his wife and 4-year-old son, Dean, on New Year's Eve because Rogers had won money from one of the three camp trusties.

He said they held him up and forced him to drive them to the Rogers dwelling.

Senator Radcliffe (Democrat), of Maryland, was named secretary of the group.

Other members of the commission are Senators Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, and Barbour (Republican), of New Jersey, and Representatives Drewry (Democrat), of Virginia, and Williams (Republican), of Delaware.

Rich Men's Sons Should Enter Public Life, Says Cromwell

All rich men's son should enter public life, even though they know they are "going to take a beating," James Cromwell, the new United States Minister to Canada and husband of heiress Doris Duke Cromwell, said today.

Cromwell, whose appointment as Canadian Minister was confirmed by the Senate yesterday and who is flying to Ottawa January 22 with his wife to assume his post, philosophized:

"If you're a poor man and you take a job, they say you are serving the vested interests.

"If you're a rich man and you take a job, they say you bought it.

"You 'get it' either way.

"When you go into public life, you have got to expect to take a beating. If you don't expect a beating, don't go into public life. The beatings never bother me.

"You can't have everything."

The new Minister said this country "has done so much for Mrs. Cromwell and me" that now they want to "do something for this country." He is undecided whether he will return to his home State of New Jersey later this year to run for the Senate. He said running for elective office is "the real test."

Cromwell said he would follow the "traditional policies of the State Department" and stay on the job until I'm called back."

British Bomb Base, Fly Far Over Germany

Sylt Flares Darkened; Hamburg, Frankfort And Ruhr Scouted

By Edwin Stout,
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 12.—Great Britain disclosed officially tonight her airmen had bombed and reconnoitered far inside German territory.

Apparently in retaliation for several successive days of flight by German planes over the British Isles, Royal Air Force planes dropped six bombs on a row of lights believed to have been a path of flares to guide German aircraft in Rantum Bay on the Island of Sylt, Germany's great seaplane base in the North Sea.

A British statement said all the planes returned safely despite anti-aircraft fire.

Base Is Darkened

The lights in Rantum Bay were extinguished immediately after the bombs dropped. The bombing occurred during "routine patrols" over German seaplane bases in Helgoland Bight and farther north.

British aircraft Thursday night, the British said, flew over Hamburg, Frankfort (roughly 100 miles east of the Belgian border), and the Ruhr industrial area in western Germany. "Much useful information" was reported.

Londoners heard antiaircraft batteries shooting at a German raider today over the Thames estuary, one of five points on the English east coast scouted in the fourth successive day by such flights.

The German fliers kept up the survey of London's outskirts, the southeast coast and the Suffolk, Norfolk and Yorkshire coasts.

Over the Thames three British Spitfires struck from the clouds at a lone raider which was last seen trailing smoke and heading out to sea with the chaser planes in pursuit.

All Chased to Sea

The plane which reached the Suffolk coast was a Heinkel. Another Heinkel flew over Yorkshire. A Dornier "Flying Pencil," a bimotored bomber with an unusually long and narrow fuselage, was seen near the Norfolk coast. She was believed to be a minelayer.

British planes and guns were reported to have forced all the raiders out to sea.

The sinking of the 1,796-ton British steamer Keynes by German bombers yesterday in the North Sea was disclosed when the vessel's 17 crew members were landed at a British port. They said Nazi planes attacked their ship twice, scoring five direct hits. The radio operator was injured.

The mate of the Keynes said he saw another ship apparently bombed, with a third standing by.

The 195-ton British trawler Croxton also was sunk and her crew of nine landed today in Britain.

Bombed yesterday, the 932-ton British steamer Pitwines was taken in tow after her crew was rescued.

Three other vessels went down off England in the past 24 hours, all mine victims. They were the Granta, 2,719 tons, British; the tanker El Oso, 7,267 tons, British, and the Traviata, 5,123 tons, Italian.

Belgians Fight Planes

Brussels, Jan. 12 (AP).—Belgian pursuit planes and antiaircraft batteries went into action today as foreign planes flew over Belgium for the third successive day. The foreign aircraft were not identified.

Planes were heard over Luxembourg, but not seen.

Kennedy Wept With Chamberlain At War, Says Book

London, Jan. 12.—Prime Minister Chamberlain and Ambassador Kennedy were in tears the morning of September 3, the day war broke out, according to Beverley Baxter, member of Parliament and journalist, in his new book, "Men, Masters and Montebanks."

Before going to the House of Commons to announce war had been declared, Chamberlain, Baxter relates, received Kennedy at No. 10 Downing street.

"They shook hands" writes Baxter. "They said the conventional things and then both men could keep up the pretense no longer. Openly and unashamedly they wept."

Turkey Reported Helping Italy Unify Balkans

from a secret conference with Regent Prince Paul of Yugoslavia, gave his government ministers a confidential report, presumably on the question of Rumania and Yugoslavia joining an Italian neutral front in southeastern Europe.

The heads of the two states met two days ago at Vrsac, near the frontier, together with Crown Prince Mihai of Rumania and the Yugoslav premier, Dragisa Cvetkovic.

Authoritative circles said the royal leaders agreed that any Russian advance into southeast Europe would constitute a "common danger," while Italy and her ally, Hungary, might supply valuable aid in resistance to such a Russian move.

Rumanian governmental spokesmen reiterated that not one inch of territory would be given up to any power.

However, there were many private expressions of the belief that Rumania might well afford to agree to discuss Hungarian claims on Transylvania after the European war in return for assurance of Italian-Hungarian military help if Russia invaded Bessarabia.

It was understood that in the conference at Vrsac King Carol sought to determine what support Rumania might expect from Yugoslavia in her diplomatic negotiations with Italy and Hungary, in addition to what aid might be expected in the event of a Russian attack.

Italian Interest Grows

Rome, Jan. 12.—Italian interest in the Balkan entente meeting scheduled for February 2, 3 and 4, is becoming keener every day; for it is believed that big developments are under way.

The Giornale d'Italia's Budapest correspondent today gives four important problems which, he said, will be the principal subjects of discussion—relations between the Balkan entente and Italy; relations between the Balkan states and Hungary, but particularly between Rumania and Hungary; the common attitude in the face of the European war, and the political line to be followed in the face of a common Bolshevik danger.

Britain May Take Over Securities

By Frank R. Kelley.
Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Jan. 12.—Early action by the British government to requisition all American securities held by British subjects, in order to sell them in Wall Street, to finance purchases of war materials in the United States under the cash-and-carry clause of the neutrality act, was forecast in London financial circles tonight.

The British treasury possesses emergency power to take this step, paying not less than market prices.

Col. J. J. Llewellin, parliamentary secretary to the ministry of supply, mentioned this and two other methods by which Britain could pay for her imports from foreign countries. Use of vast treasury gold reserves and stimulation of exports.

GOP Refuses Help On Finn Aid Plans

any commitments are made on the President's proposal.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, said that "until we know all of the facts" he was not willing to support any program for aid to the Finns.

Bankhead Reveals Discussion

"I don't propose to take any step to involve us in the European affair," said Borah. "While I am anxious to help the Finns, the United States comes first."

Republican comment followed the President's announcement at yesterday's press conference that he had turned over to Congressional leaders the problem of giving assistance to Finland. He said the problem of aiding the embattled republic ought not to become involved in partisan politics. Therefore he said he had asked leaders of both parties to get together on a solution.

Queried by reporters, Speaker Bankhead said "one or two preliminary conferences" had been held on the whole Finnish problem, "but nothing has been done about working out a specific plan as far as the House is concerned."

Sale of Rifles Proposed

At his press conference the President said he had not the faintest idea of specific steps that might be taken. He did not answer directly questions on whether aid might be extended in the form of loans or selling Army semiautomatic Garand rifles to the Finns at a nominal sum.

Several bills already are pending in Congress providing for direct aid, including a proposed $60,000,000 loan from the RFC, suspension of the Finnish debt, Export-Import Bank loans, and sale of Garand rifles at $1 each—far below cost.

Previously a $10,000,000 credit had been set up here for Finland by the RFC and the Export-Import Bank, which the Finns could draw on for purely civilian purchases.

Senator McNary's first reaction to the proposal that Democratic and Republican congressional leaders get together on the program was: "President Roosevelt should not attempt to throw the Finnish question into the lap of Congress."

"The President has all the agencies best fitted to deal with this question," said the Oregon Senator. "The State Department is in a position to know what Finland's needs are and the best idea of how to approach the whole prbolem."

McNary for Finns

Senator McNary privately has expressed strong sympathy with Finland and a desire to aid the Finns. But he has expressed opposition to a loan of a military nature as contrary to American neutrality policy and believes cancellation of the Finnish debt "would set a bad precedent."

Representative Woodruff (Republican), of Michigan, while denouncing Russia, said this Government should proceed cautiously on the Finnish question and not set a precedent that might cost it billions as did the World War loans.

Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, said "this Government should take an immediate stand on its policy toward Finland. I would vote for a bill to provide all possible assistance to this game little country provided the legislation stayed within our neutrality act."

with originating the plan to attack Finland, was said to have been "liquidated." Gen. V. Meretzkov, former commander of the Leningrad army district, and the former Russian minister to Helsinki, were reported executed.

Stalin's present purge, threatening to dislocate sections of Soviet industry and transport, was also reported to be a subject of worry to Germany.

Huge Forces on Line

Copenhagen, Jan. 12 (AP).—About 20 Red army divisions, totaling close to 400,000 men and at least 2,000 guns of all sizes were said in Finnish quarters today to have been concentrated against the Mannerheim Line defenses in Karelia.

House Passes Bill To Raise Defenses By $264,000,000

10,000 tons and 8-inch guns. While the treaties no longer operate, existing laws fix the size of ships by the old limits. His statement added weight to reports the Navy planned to construct larger and heavier-gunned cruisers.

In approving the emergency defense supply bill, the House slashed an additional $2,586,656 from the budget estimates, cutting the measure $7,387,656 below the amount asked by President Roosevelt. The further cut, however, was recommended by the Army, as unnecessary, recruiting of the additional troops having been slower than anticipated.

An effort to cut the defense program further failed when a motion of Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, to cut funds for Army training from $18,000,000 to $9,000,000, lost, 93 to 50.

Senator Walsh, in a formal statement, said he was "dubious" of the plan to increase the Navy's authorized limit at this session, when 64 vessels can be laid down now under the present limits. The proposal, he said, "might tend to becloud and confuse the Congress and the country on the question of national defense, naval strength and naval construction."

Admiral Stark, however, testified that the Navy was "short in aircraft carriers and cruisers" and officials said that no carriers and only a few cruisers could be constructed under the present limits.

Chairman Snyder of the House Military Appropriations subcommittee warned that the Army needed more antiaircraft guns and intensive training in large-scale maneuvers. He urged boosting the Army plane strength from 5,500 to 6,000.

Japan Faces Cabinet Crisis On U. S. Trade

Hull Refused Stopgap Treaty, Envoy Reports; Abe Successor Problem

By Relman Morin.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Tokyo (Saturday), Jan. 13.—Japan is facing a cabinet crisis over the week-end, with the resignation of Premier Gen. Nobuyuki Abe expected tomorrow, but Japanese-American relations are overshadowing the question of Abe's successor.

Domei, news agency with close government connections, quoted the premier as saying he would quit after a special cabinet session Sunday and all his ministers are expected to go with him. American questions figure in this decision and are expected to influence the make-up of the new government.

Political quarters expressed belief that Admiral Kichisaburo Nomura would be reappointed foreign minister to preserve the continuity of talks he has been conducting with United States Ambassador Joseph C. Grew.

Had Some Success

These quarters placed great emphasis on Nomura's efforts to reach an understanding with the United States on trade problems, which are regarded with increasing anxiety as the date of termination of the existing commercial treaty between the two nations January 26 draws near. The United States last July 26 gave the required six months' notice for terminating the treaty.

Nomura, a former naval attache at Washington, has many American friends, and he is considered here to have made progress toward improving Japan's relations with the United States.

Domei said that Kensuke Horinouchi, Japanese Ambassador to Washington, had broached to Secretary of State Cordell Hull on December 23 the question of a temporary arrangement pending further trade treaty negotiations.

Hull's answer, however, Domei said, "should be interpreted that the United States has no intention of starting any such negotiations."

"Therefore," Domei continued, "it is feared that Japanese-American trade relations may be placed at the mercy of public opinion in the United States, which often adheres to such reckless demands as prohibition of exports to Japan and immediate expansion of the American Navy."

Army, Civilians at Odds

Announcement of Abe's intention to resign was not unexpected, for observers had predicted that the government would fall if the United States failed to react favorably to Japanese proposals for reopening the lower Yangtze to third-power trade.

The Yangtze plan was regarded as an overture to the United States to form a new trade understanding when the present treaty expires.

Search already was under way for Abe's successor, but there were indications that a "stop gap" cabinet would be formed because of the inability of military and civilian factions to agree on a strong premier.

Prominently mentioned were Gen. Kuzishige Ugaki, former governor-general of Korea, and Prince Formumaro Konoye, a former premier, but Ugaki was considered unacceptable to most of the army and Konoye was said to have rejected suggestions that he take the helm.

Tokyo, Jan. 12 (AP).—Looking with suspicion on the renewed United States Navy proposal to improve harbor facilities at Guam, the Japanese saw it today as another link in a chain of "unfriendly gestures" toward their Asiatic aspirations.

Japanese naval officers, who consider Guam an extremely vulnerable American base, nevertheless regard reappearance of the improvement question as a "moral threat," increasingly important to Japan because of the United States' strengthened policy in the Pacific during the last year.

Last year, when the Guam "lookout post" was a hot issue in the United States Congress, Admiral Mitsumasa Yonai, then minister of the navy and now member of the Japanese war council, said Japan was not strategically very deeply concerned.

Japan Rejects French Protest On Rail Raids

Bombing to Go on Till Arms to China Cease, Says Tokyo Spokesman

By Victor Keen
Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Shanghai, Jan. 12.—Japan today rejected the French government's protests against the Japanese bombing of the Haiphong-Yunnan Railway, filed with Tokyo January 5.

Foreign Minister Admiral Kichisaburo Nomura today presented a note to the French Ambassador, stating that the Japanese government rejected the protest on the grounds that the bombing of the railway on Chinese territory was solely a military necessity and had no political significance.

Nomura said military supplies were being transported to the interior of China via the railway.

The foreign office denied a Shanghai report that Japan had served an ultimatum on France demanding the cessation of the transportation of arms to China from French Indo-China before January 23.

Raids to Continue

A Japanese naval spokesman stated that Japanese air-raids along the section of the Yunnan Railway within Chinese territory probably would continue as long as arms shipments continue.

Japanese press reports quote non-Japanese consular sources to the effect that the railway, extending from Haiphong, Indo-China, to Kunming, the capital of Yunnan Province, had been interrupted by Japanese bombing a high trestle bridge between Mengtze and Yunnan, on the Indo-China border on January 7. French sources said two light bridges had been set up and passenger service already had been resumed.

A Japanese communique said that Lieut. Col. Masuo Miura, commander of the Japanese garrison at Luchow, Central Anhwei Province near Lake Mao, was killed January 4 leading a detachment in mopping-up operations.

Hope for Peace

A Japanese embassy spokesman declared today that Japan would welcome peace with the new Chinese central government, when it is established, despite the fact that the proposed Wang Ching-wei regime would not extend to the interior of China.

He admitted that Japan did not look with equanimity on any movement envisaging a fusion of the Chungking and the proposed new central government unless Chungking discarded its anti-Japanese and pro-Communist policies.

China Reported Seeking New Credits

China is seeking additional United States credits to supplement $25,000,000 worth extended by the Export-Import Bank, James A. Moffett, vice president of the California-Texas Oil Co., said yesterday after a conference with President Roosevelt.

Moffett said he called on the Chief Executive to give him confidential information assembled by his company's agents relative to conditions in interior China.

Chinese officials have set no definite limit on the amount of credit they want, he said, but they would like an overall credit of $100,000,000. He added that reports to his company indicate that, despite the handicap of war, China is steadily amortizing the original $25,000,000 credit by exporting to the United States through Indo-China, although Japanese operations are threatening that channel.

It was recalled in this connection that Commerce Department figures showed that Chinese exports to the United States for October, 1939, amounted to $5,550,000 as compared with only $1,717,000 in October, 1938.

Nazis to Ask Cash in Advance For Exports to Neutral Lands

By Russell Hill.
Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Berlin, Jan. 12.—In order to evade the effect of England's seizure of German exports on neutral ships, Germany will demand in the future that all shipments for overseas be paid for in advance by the importer. Under this system, it is pointed out here, any goods seized by England will necessarily be neutral property and German exporters will run no liability of loss.

If the British continue to block exports in spite of the new German policy, Germany will urge neutral countries involved not to let themselves be imposed upon.

Some neutral observers here see a possibility that the measure may work out to Germany's disadvantage. If England confiscates German exports that are really no longer German property, it is believed that neutral overseas countries may cease purchases in Germany.

The foreign importer, who continues to buy from the Reich will suffer other disadvantages. Since he can no longer get German credit, he must pay cash no later than the time at which the shipment leaves a continental harbor. Furthermore, he must bear the entire cost of war insurance charges.

If the foreign importer is a citizen of a country that has a clearing agreement with the Reich, he will have to pay cash but can have the value of the purchase debited to his country's clearing account—provided that country has a credit balance with Germany.

In cases where the exports are destined to countries connected with Germany by overland trade routes, this new policy will not apply, since there would be no possibility of British interference in the trade.

Engineers Told They Could End Poverty

Economist Calls for Planned Economy in 'Food and Shelter War'

An economist told the American Engineering Council last night that the Nation's engineers could abolish poverty "if they were allowed to go ahead."

Dr. William T. Foster, director of the Pollak Foundation and former president of Reed College, told the representatives of 75,000 engineers that "the respectable economists have given up the ghost." He spoke at a banquet at the Mayflower Hotel concluding the council's twentieth annual assembly.

The economist laid down a barrage of verbal quips and biting sarcasm to sharpen his plea for birth of the "unborn social engineer."

The 300 assembled engineers listened with relish as Dr. Foster delivered a verbal trouncing to "respectable" economists and bankers. For them it was the spectacle of the engineer's traditional adversary taking up their side of the argument.

Urges Collective Action

"Economists," the speaker said, "are largely historians. They tell us what has happened after we know too well.

"If engineers were allowed to go ahead they could abolish poverty for all willing to work."

The time has come, he went on, for "those of us who are eager to preserve democracy to build a new economic system. Otherwise, we face Hitlerism, or some other plunge into chaos."

Claiming that unemployment is a "greater threat to democracy than Germany ever can be," he asked:

"Why do we fight a food and shelter war individually, when we realize that we must fight a blood and bullets war collectively?"

Calls for Planned Economy

He called for a planned system of money and credit to keep consumer purchasing power at the level of the Nation's productive capacity.

The use of money and credit invalidates classical economic theory, which is based upon a barter system, he claimed, insisting that the "money problem" lies at the center of economic collapse. "In the future," he concluded, "we must provide as effectively for financing consumption as in the past we have provided for financing production."

Earlier in the day, Richard Pattee, of the State Department, told the council that a plan for exchange of students and professors with 11 South American countries is near completion. Eleven nations, he said, have ratified a treaty embodying the plan.

Donald H. Sawyer, head of the public buildings branch of the Federal Works Agency, was elected vice president of the council by a mail vote tabulated yesterday. Alonzo J. Hammond, of Chicago, was elected president.

Luise Rainer Spends Birthday Seeking Help For Friends in Reich and Admiring Washington

LUISE RAINER JEANNE KAVANAUGH MRS. JAMES H. WHYTE

Hostess and a guest drink a toast to Miss Rainer at the party given on her birthday yesterday at the home of Mrs. Whyte, 1707 H street north west

Which birthday she was celebrating was left untold. She was young enough to be gay-eyed and excited about seeing a new city, old enough for her face to darken and turn a little shy at mention of her friends in Europe.

These friends were the reason for her coming to Washington. She visited the State Department to seek aid for friends in Germany, Czecho-Slovakia and Austria, some of them in concentration camps.

Who they were she would not tell, but her parents, she said, are not in immediate danger. They have lived in Brussels, Belgium, for 11 years.

The birthday, somewhere between her twenty-fifth and thirtieth, was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Whyte, of 1707 H street northwest. Miss Rainer met the Whytes in October on a boat from Europe.

Her first talk was about Washington. "I love this town," she said, and while New York is a place to work, "of all places, it would be nice to live in Washington."

She had visited the Lincoln Memorial, the Folger Shakespeare Library—"Measure for Measure" is her favorite and she has played it in German and English—and the parks. "I am so happy if I see some trees," she said.

Her quick movements slowed, and her lively smile faded as she talked of what she saw in Europe. This is a main thought in planning her own future.

She was there in the blackouts, through the first six weeks of war, and she has friends in England and others fighting in the Maginot Line.

For the reason that a movie might bring some bit of happiness to these friends, she would rather go back to the screen than to a stage role. "Work," she said, when asked about her plans, and then after a little pause, she repeated the word.

She said she has been reading manuscripts steadily since returning to this country, but she is taking her time to find the right role. "I worked myself ill and unhappy in Hollywood, and I don't intend to do it again."

"There is plenty of time to wait," she said—until she finds the part that will mean some happiness in Europe. It doesn't matter whether the role is "heavy or light," she said, as long as it is real and human.

Contributions Pour Into Finn Relief Coffers

Father Walsh Calls Response to Benefit Show Gratifying

The Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S.J., chairman of the Washington Unit of the Finnish Relief Fund, Inc., yesterday called the public's response to the benefit showing of "Gone With the Wind" at the Palace Theater January 27 "most gratifying."

Contributions ranging from $100 to $5 apiece for seats are pouring into the unit's office in the Transportation Building, Father Walsh reported from a desk piled high with letters and checks. Complete returns which will go to aid Finnish war victims will be announced Monday, he said.

Nearly 3,000 invitations have been sent to leaders in the Capital's civic, business and social life. Average amount contributed for seats is more than $10, Father Walsh said. Monday a block of reserved seats will go on sale at a price substantially less than $10.

A few blocks of 20 or more seats have been paid for by persons who plan to hold "Finnish relief dinners" before attending the motion picture. The theater was bought out by an anonymous donor for the evening of January 27, and given to the organization.

Preceding the showing of the picture there will be a special five-minute prologue of pantomime and music entitled "Salute to Finland" given by trained actors.

Working with Father Walsh, who is vice president of Georgetown University, are Milton M. Brown, secretary, and Robert V. Felming, president of the Riggs National Bank, treasurer.

Members of the Washington committee include Bishop James E. Freeman, Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation; Eugene Meyer, publisher of The Post; Newbold Noyes, associate editor of the Evening Star; Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, publisher of the Times-Hearld; John T. O'Rourke, managing editor of the Daily News; Emil Hurja, publisher of the Pathfinder; Herbert Wright, professor of international law at Catholic University, and I. J. Roberts, assistant cashier of the Riggs National Bank.

Admiral Taussig Supports Move to Reorganize Navy

A Congressional move to reorganize the Navy Department received support yesterday from Rear Admiral Joseph K. Taussig, commandant of the Norfolk Naval Base.

In an article in the Naval Institute Proceedings, Admiral Taussig proposed a drastic revamping of the departmental bureaus into three offices—operations, personnel and material.

"There is so much divided responsibility with so many coequal bureau chiefs, and with a chief of naval operations who has no authority over these chiefs," he said, "that we have in our present setup an excellent example of the tail wagging the dog."

Fred Corcoran, tournament manager for the Professional Golfers Association, accepted a $1,500 guarantee for the Ryder Cuppers to play in the 36-hole four-ball event.

Philadelphia Strike Ties Up Postal Wires

Philadelphia, Jan. 12 (AP).—The first strike against the city's ½ per cent earned income tax tied up all communications over the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. system here late today.

Leo G. Keller, local chairman of the American Communications Association (C. I. O.), who called the strike said it would continue "until the company agrees to absorb the tax itself."

Wage tax due on early January earnings was deducted by the company for the first time today.

The tax, expected to raise $18,000,000 annually to balance the city's budget has been fought unsuccessfully in the courts by organized labor.

Ecuador Nips Revolt Led by Ex-President

Rebellion Started When Election Returns Showed Him Losing

By the Associated Press

Guayaquil, Ecuador, Jan. 12.—A small band of army sergeants and soldiers today nipped an uprising started under the leadership of Jose Maria Velasco Ibarra, former President, when returns showed him defeated in the Presidential election of Wednesday and Thursday.

Aviation officers and some 200 civilians staged the uprising at Guayaquil's military aviation field.

Velasco Ibarra, Maj. Rafael Astudillo and Carlos Cuevara Moreno, Velasco Ibarra's secretary, were arrested and placed aboard the naval training ship President Alfaro, at Guayaquil. Others arrested included Flores Milo, a Guayaquil broker, and rebel aviation officers.

Velasco Ibarra, who was deposed as President by the army in 1935, ran as an independent in this week's election against Carlos Arroyo del Rio, Liberal, and Jacinto Jijon Camano, Conservative, who came from Los Angeles, Calif.

The uprising was touched off by a government announcement in Quito that Arroyo del Rio, who had resigned as provisional President to make the race, could be considered elected. The new President is scheduled to take office September 1.

Rebel aviation officers seized Col. Luis Rodriguez, air field commander, at his home and took him to the field, where ringleaders immediately sought to expand their forces.

Even as infantrymen were being summoned from the capital's garrisons to quell the movement, however, a group of soldiers and sailors led by Sergt. Tomas Osorio captured the rebel heads. Civilians immediately fled.

A casualty was Humberto Larrea, aviation sub-lieutenant, who was wounded.

The Dusseldorf was brought through the Panama Canal by the prize crew and taken to Jamaica, where she was changed to British registry.

Afraid of Future, Broker Kills Wife And Tries Suicide

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 12 (AP).—Life which had become "too complicated" in a fast-changing world led a 48-year-old insurance broker to kill his wife and daughter today, and critically wound himself.

Lawrence Dayton, deputy district attorney, said he had obtained a statement from J. Harold Friedman in which the man said the shootings constituted a plan to save his family from the "uncertainties of the future."

Hospital attendants gave Friedman slight chance to recover. His daughter, Marjorie, 4, died a few hours after the mother was killed.

In a note, the insurance man complained life had "become too complicated. Our world is changing too fast. I'm worried about the future of my family, religion and country."

Dayton said Friedman's 7-month-old son escaped because the pistol jammed as he neared the infant's room.

Friedman expressed the hope he would die, Dayton said.

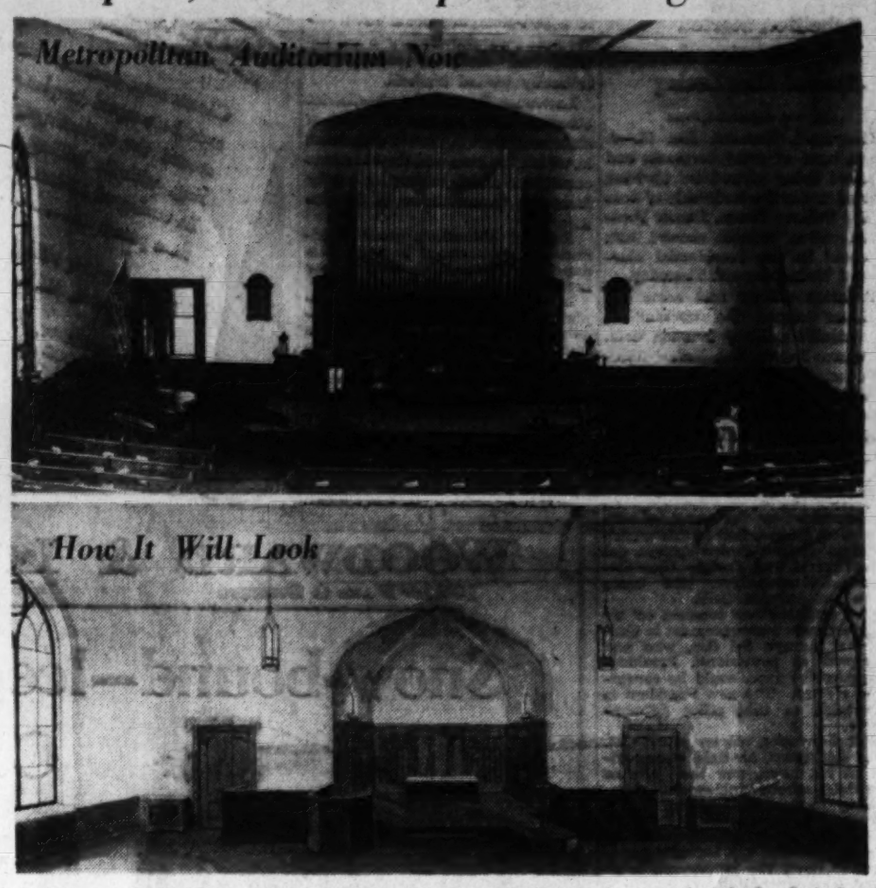
Church of the Week

Metropolitan Parish, Once Worshiping In Capitol, Furthers Expansion Program



The bang of hammers soon will be heard around Fourth and B streets southeast, as the next phase of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church's expansion program gets under way.

Comprising the renovating and redecorating of the church auditorium, the project was given the "green light" on Wednesday night by the joint boards of the congregation, and will entail an expenditure of about $4,000, according to Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich, pastor.

Plans call for converting the place into a cathedral-type sanctuary, with low rostrum and Geneva pulpit, the latter flanked by choir stalls. Ecclesiastical tri-chairs will be placed in the rear of the rostrum near carved paneling, behind which the present organ pipes are to be concealed. The right choir stall will house the console.

Six 5-foot electric lanterns will swing from the ceiling, the beamwork of which is being replaced, and a small spotlight will be set among the beams to illuminate an oil painting of Jesus on the wall above the rostrum.

Five-Year Plan

Cathedral casements for the present stained-glass windows, new carpeting for the floors, decorative grillwork on the radiators and many other features will be included in the project. Arthur Robinson, of the board of elders, is general chairman.

Other committeemen are John Bruce, Handy, elder; Isaac Childs, president of the board of trustees; Bruce Kreitzer, deacon; Mrs. Craig Jones, president of the board of deaconesses; Miss Margaret Moore, assistant Sunday school superintendent; Craig Jones, church treasurer; William J. Weber, choir director, and Mrs. Bernard Scott.

The five-year church extension plan was initiated in 1938, the first phase covering the employment of a church secretary and an assistant pastor, and the renovating of the church school space. The cost of the entire program—$10,000—already has been underwritten by the congregation. It is hoped that landscaping can be done this spring.

250 Members Added

Dr. Fendrich said yesterday that the renovation will require about five weeks, during which time worship services will be held in the church school assembly room. If that space is found inadequate, a temporary additional morning service will be started. The remodeling of the auditorium is expected to allow seating room for more than 100 more worshipers. Dr. William J. Sly is associate pastor, and Mrs. Gretta Allen, church secretary.

The present enterprise is materializing as Dr. Fendrich begins the second year of his association with the congregation—a period marked by tremendous strides. Notable is the fact that 250 new members have been added to the church rolls, and the Sunday school enrollment doubled.

A mothers' council also has been organized within the last year, through which the activities of the girls' circles, girls' choir, and Girls' Friendly Society, and Mothers' Circle are conducted. Mrs. Craig Jones, Mrs. Fendrich, Jane Chance and Mrs. Jesse Veitch are among the leaders of these groups.

A short time ago Dr. Fendrich launched a young people's forum under the leadership of the Christian Endeavor Societies. They are now discussing the theme of "What Jesus Meant," with the pastor giving a brief message, and a forum following. A buffet supper is held in connection with the Sunday night meetings.

Harry Bracken Is Leader

Miss Sabina Coffey is advisor of the Young People's Endeavor Society; Miss Arline Appeck is president, and Harold Davis leads the college age group. Mrs. P. C. Riston is choir mother of the young women's choral unit.

Leaders of the Woman's Guild and the Woman's Missionary Society are Mrs. Marguerite Henderer and Mrs. John Thompson.

Among Washington's most historically interesting congregations, Metropolitan Church held services in the fall of 1864 in the south wing of the Capitol Building. Previously, they met in private homes and in a schoolhouse. Dr. John Chester was first pastor.

Progressive Clergyman

While worshiping at the Capitol, the little band of loyal Christians observed Holy Communion and baptism—believed to be the first and only time that such ritual was celebrated there.

Dr. Fendrich, who will officiate at services of Holy Communion and baptism and greet new members tomorrow, is one of Washington's most progressive clergymen and able speakers.

Little Stories about GREAT HYMNS

"HARK! THE HERALD ANGELS SING"
*Rev. Charles Wesley

"Hark! the herald angels sing,
'Glory to the new-born King;
Peace on earth, and mercy mild;
God and sinners reconciled.'
Joyful, all ye nations, rise,
Join the triumph of the skies,
With angelic hosts proclaim
'Christ is born in Bethlehem.'
Hark! the herald angels sing,
'Glory to the new-born King.'"

*This favorite Christmas song was written by Rev. Charles Wesley and was first published in 1739. Many alterations have been made in the text by Whitefield, Malan and even Wesley himself. It is found in almost every Christian hymnal.

U. S. Appeal Heard in A.M.A. Trust Suit

Government Pleads For Reinstatement of Quashed Indictments

Government counsel yesterday urged the District Court of Appeals to give medicine and surgery the protection of the Sherman anti-trust act against boycotts and combinations in restraint of trade.

The American Medical Association, District Medical Society, two other organizations and 21 prominent physicians were indicted here in December, 1937, for criminal conspiracy as a result of a campaign against Group Health Association, Inc.

Justice James M. Proctor, of the District Court, quashed this indictment last July 26, holding that medicine was not trade and therefore medical organizations were not combinations in restraint of trade which might be prosecuted under the Sherman act.

Called a Social Issue

Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner and Justices Justin Miller and Fred M. Vinson heard the Government's appeal from Proctor's ruling in the Court of Appeals yesterday.

Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General, told the court that a broad social question was involved in the appeal and that public regulation of health matters required reversal of Proctor's ruling. He argued that in the light of modern conditions medicine is just as much trade in need of antitrust regulation as any other business. He urged the higher court to reinstate the indictment and order "organized medicine" to defend itself before a trial jury.

"The doctors are standing here defending a boycott for the sole purpose of protecting their fees," Arnold asserted.

Seth W. Richardson, chief counsel for A. M. A., deprecated the Government effort to make the case a national social question and asked that it be considered as an ordinary local prosecution. He denied Government claims that the A. M. A.'s alleged monopoly hampered efforts to reduce the cost of medical care.

"If there is to be a consummation of medical relief to poor people," said Richardson, "the doctors will be the ones to bring that relief to the people. The doctors of this country give $1,000,000 a day in free medical care. Now they are pilloried here as standing in the way of relief."

The court was not expected to give its decision for several weeks. Both sides have indicated that the decision will be taken to the Supreme Court for a final ruling.

Allen Urges Tax Installment Plan

the total tax would have to be paid on March 15, 1940.

District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan said the only way possible now for a divided payment plan is for Congress to pass such an amendment.

Certain District officials said the income levy is estimated to bring in a "comparatively" small amount to the District and should be paid in only one installment. The recent figures released by the Federal Budget Burea placed the intake at $1,200,000.

The tax itself is 1 per cent on the first $5,000 of taxable income; 10½ per cent on the next $5,000, and 3 per cent on all taxable income over $20,000. The same exemptions as apply to the Federal tax apply to the District.

Wagner Asserts Security Board Backs Annuities

By the Associated Press

Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, said yesterday the Social Security Board has approved in principle his proposal that the Government sell old-age annuities.

Annuities up to $100 a month would be sold through postoffices, much as "baby bonds" and postal savings accounts are handled. Wagner said payments could be made annually or in installments throughout the year. His plan also would permit a lump-sum payment for a Government-guaranteed annuity.

Wagner said he would introduce legislation to carry out the plan at this session, but added that major insurance companies might offer stiff opposition.

Bail Set at $1,000 In Shooting of Boy

Frederick Sullivan, 18, 1100 block I street southeast, was held under $1,000 bail yesterday after his arraignment in Police Court charged with shooting the 11-year-old brother of a friend.

His case was continued until January 26, pending the outcome of the condition of Vincent Barclay, 11, of 1205 I street southeast, who was accidentally shot at his home Wednesday.

Sullivan told police he was showing a .32-caliber rifle to Vincent's brother, Bernard. Thinking the gun was empty he pulled the trigger. Yesterday, Casualty Hospital attaches said Vincent still was in serious condition.

years," he said, "that friendship resulting from the admiration I came to have for him for the fine job of work he did when he was thrust into my State of Massachusetts a few years ago to clean up a bad mess in the WPA.

"WPA in Massachusetts at that time was in a frightful condition, but Paul Edwards courageously tackled the job and saw it through to a finish, with the result that the fine working WPA machinery which we now have can be credited solely to his efforts."

Connery expressed the hope that Representative Byrns (Democrat), of Tennessee, who made the initial attack on Edwards in the House Thursday, would meet the WPA administrator and learn that he is anything but an arrogant, impudent, insolent nit-wit."

Representative Brown (Republican), of Ohio, told the House he was amazed that a Democrat, especially the son of a former Speaker, should be treated like a Republican Congressman by a Federal official.

Citing the episode in The Washington Post, he asked whether members of Congress are trying to get well-paying jobs for their constituents "at the expense of the poor, hungry, and the unfortunate."

"Can it be that political patronage even extends down into the humanitarian field of public relief, and that the money appropriated by this Congress for relief purposes is being expended to give well-paying jobs to deserving and worthy congressional henchmen?"

Brown suggested that Edwards furnish Congress with the names of "Congressmen who have been taking up your valuable time and embarrassing you with demands for political patronage.

"Let the world know who does this heaping of abuse upon your shoulders in attempting to interfere with your bureaucratic rights and privileges?"

Case For Delay

A good many residents of the District are no doubt wishing fervently that March had been omitted from the calendar. For in that single month District taxpayers will be called upon to meet one-half the taxes on real estate and tangible property, and pay the new District income tax in full, as well as at least one-fourth of the amount due on Federal income tax account.

The tax on intangibles and the business privilege tax, both of which were dropped when the local income tax was approved, were payable in two installments, one-half in March and the other half in September. It would seem only reasonable, to make similar provision for dividing or deferring payments due under the District income tax. At least some slight relief would be afforded residents from the burden of multiple taxes which not only create difficult problems for individual taxpayers but also have an adverse effect upon local business during the pre-Easter season.

However, the District Commissioners claim that they are without legal authority to defer or divide income-tax payments. The assessor, it is true, may extend the time of payment at the request of the taxpayer up to six months. But this provision for delay is regarded as applicable only to emergency cases, and presumably will be invoked only under exceptional conditions. Consequently, the desired relief will probably have to be sought by appealing to Congress to amend the law.

The case for such an appeal is certainly strong and would unquestionably be supported heartily by local business interests.

No Easy Job

Since the undeclared war on China began, two and a half years ago, three separate governments have held office in Japan and a fourth now seems to be in prospect.

The Konoye regime enjoyed by far the longest tenure. With one shake-up, marked by the resignation of Foreign Minister Ugaki on August 1, 1938, it remained in power from June, 1937, to January, 1939. That was the period which saw the Japanese army winning a succession of military victories, and the Japanese people encouraged by constant assurances of a final triumph which even today continues to elude their grasp.

The Hiranuma cabinet, appointed on January 5, 1939, had to operate in a much less favorable atmosphere than that of its predecessor. In less than seven months, as a consequence of the German-Soviet pact which smashed to smithereens the anti-Comintern agreement by which Japan had set much store, it was forced to resign.

During the four and a half months since he became premier, Gen. Nobuyuki Abe, has had increasingly hard going. Coincident with increasing difficulties on the home front, he has been vigorously assailed by members of the Diet for failure to cope with domestic problems. The army leaders have developed a dislike for him and his regime because he wrested from them the concession to reopen the Yangtze and Pearl Rivers to foreign ships, yet did not succeed in mollifying the United States sufficiently to get this country to make a new commercial treaty with the island empire. Premier Abe has thus been between the devil and the deep blue sea and it seems to be only the difficulty of finding a successor which keeps him in office.

It is, of course, the war which is responsible for the disturbed political situation, emphasized by the fact that the next government in Japan will be the third in little more than a year. And the war is the product of the overweening ambitions of the Japanese army and its ghastly miscalculations of the length of time it would take to conquer China.

Curiously enough, there is and has been no outward expression of discontent with the army, as such. Trained for many centuries in habits of indirection, the Japanese people have been taking it out on the unfortunate and largely helpless civilian politicians. The army remains sacrosanct and even joins, as it is doing now in the case of Premier Abe, in forcing out a government whose unpopularity is basically the result of a tacit dissatisfaction with the army.

But if victory continues to elude the grasp of the fighting forces, and the pressures within Japan continue to mount, the warlords' exemption from criticism will not indefinitely continue. After all, the power which the Japanese military exercise, and the prestige which they enjoy, both depend on the fact that they have won an almost unending succession of victories.

If there are no more victories and the myth of invincibility is shattered, the convenient theory that it is always the civil government which is responsible for difficulties will not long survive.

Mr. Hull Sums Up

Even the most fanatical opponents of the trade agreements program, assuming that their minds remain open to the influences of reason, must have been impressed by the statement which Secretary Hull presented to the Ways and Means Committee in its behalf.

That statement, to any objective mind, was the more convincing because of its temperate and, indeed, its truly judicial quality. There was nothing partisan in the presentation. The Secretary of State carefully restrained his tendency to exaggerate the unquestionably evil influences of the Hawley-Smoot tariff. He was equally careful to attribute credit for the establishment of unconditional most-favored nation policy to the Harding Administration. In other ways he made plain that the trade agreements program has nothing to do with politics but must be regarded as wholly logical for a great trading nation which has assumed a presumably permanent creditor status.

Far beyond this service, however, Mr. Hull afforded his audience, which should include every literate American, a clear and concise perspective on a program which is too frequently considered in partial or piecemeal fashion. Of course there are not many minds in the country with the detailed knowledge, the reasoning powers and the vision to see so infinitely complex a problem as a whole. But the Secretary of State has all these qualities. And the way he utilized them on Thursday makes his statement before the House committee a document of historic importance.

Mr. Hull made clear the fundamental fact which is too frequently ignored—that a commercial nation which deliberately sets out to regiment its foreign trade will, soon or late, end up by regimenting its internal trade. There cannot be a policy of embargoes, quotas, licenses and arbitrary restrictions in the one case without eventually getting the same decree rule in domestic operations.

As a lesson in the trends which, far more than the plottings of individuals, produce dictatorships, this was a masterly presentation. If put in evidence before the Dies Committee it would be worth more than all the detailed evidence on sporadic un-American activities collected there.

The leadership of the trade agreements program towards a saner civilization was important before the present war broke out. But, as Mr. Hull emphasizes, it is infinitely more important now. He in no way exaggerates in saying that the need for encouraging the underlying principles has become "crucial." And, if anything, there is understatement in his observation that "our action now will have an enormous influence upon the problem of economic reconstruction when hostilities have ceased."

In his statement the Secretary took pains to demonstrate the wholly constitutional character of the legislation which he seeks to have extended. He explained the scrupulously careful procedure which is followed to insure that no domestic interest shall suffer material damage from the limited changes in tariff schedules which are allowed. With the patience, unfailing good humor and sweet reason which make him so universally admired, Mr. Hull went exhaustively into details which by now should not need elaboration. And he offered to provide any further information which any critic may desire on any point.

The Secretary of State can cheerfully take this trouble because, in the trade agreements program, there is nothing whatsoever to conceal. Its vehement critics are the ones who seem to be relying on partial or distorted evidence to bolster their contentions. If any one, or all of them, can make a case approaching that presented by Mr. Hull it will command public attention. But there is no indication that his arguments can or will be effectively challenged.

My Friends

There are several matters on which the various members of the Roosevelt family have been known to disagree. But public speaking is, apparently, not one of them. Being an uninhibited clan they show no hesitation to get up on their feet. It is good to know, however, that they believe that the best alloy is one which combines the silver of speech with the gold of silence. They believe, in other words, that anyone who has something to say, and which Roosevelt has not? should follow some variant of the old advice to "stand up . . . speak up . . . shut up."

We now have their own admission of this in speeches made by Roosevelts separated by the width of a continent. The other day James Roosevelt opened a talk he made at Hollywood by saying: "My father gave me these hints on speechmaking. Be sincere . . . be brief . . . be seated." And here in Washington Mrs. Roosevelt told a class on public speaking for Congressional wives: "Have something to say before you get up to speak." "Be honest," she further warned them, and make certain you have "terminal facilities."

Most of Mrs. Roosevelt's talk was based on principles which might profitably be applied in any field of endeavor. "Be honest," she said. "It is not always easy because you must first be honest with yourself and about what you believe."

The class in public speaking will benefit considerably if they take this sound advice to heart. And the Nation would benefit if the same advice were carried out by the esteemed husbands of these ladies.

The Debt Limit

Whether the Federal debt (exclusive of heavy contingent obligations) slightly exceeds $45,000,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year 1941, or falls just short of that total, is relatively unimportant. But the fact that the legal debt limit now stands at $45,000,000,000 has great political significance. Public attention would be most unpleasantly directed to the trend toward bankruptcy if Congress were forced to raise the debt limit in an election year.

In his budget message the President made it clear that the only hope of staying within the legal debt limit during the fiscal year 1941 lies in a reduction of certain expenditures, and in acceptance of new tax proposals designed to yield about $460,000,000. Even if Congress does not overstep the budgeted outlays, current expenses will, it is estimated, exceed current receipts by nearly $2,900,000,000, unless additional taxes are levied.

The President hopes to narrow this gap by recapturing $700,000,000 of capital funds from various Government corporations. But assuming acceptance of all his recommendations including tax proposals, the net deficit is expected to reach $1,716,000,000.

Anxiety over the budgetary situation is not due primarily to the fact that we are fast approaching an arbitrary legal debt limit for direct Federal obligations. The real cause of alarm lies in the knowledge that year after year total expenditures have outstripped total receipts from taxes. As Representative Woodrum says: "It is a simple, fundamental fact that no individual and no nation can continue to go ahead spending more than he (or it) takes in."

The United States is a rich country; it can carry a heavy debt load. Hence, it would be idle to guess how long the Government can continue spending beyond its means without encountering disaster. Modern governments, moreover, have so many devices at their disposal for keeping down interest rates and financing deficits through pressure on banks and investment institutions, that the distress signals which once called attention to the dangers of chronic deficit financing are no longer so apparent.

Yet it can be said with absolute assurance that the time will ultimately come when confidence in the solvency of the Federal Government will be destroyed unless a determined effort is made to eliminate deficits.

At present many Congressmen are either ignorant of the dangers ahead or are willing to risk future national disaster for the sake of present personal advantage. Otherwise, it is impossible to explain the reckless drive for larger appropriations that would carry expenditures even beyond the limit set by the President. One Congressional bloc is demanding increases in farm benefit payments. Another is clamoring for more money for flood control. But nobody appears anxious to discuss plans for levying new taxes.

A reminder that an increase in the legal debt limit will be unavoidable unless this reckless spending urge is restrained may have a salutary effect upon Congress. For the mounting debt is a warning signal of the perilous extent to which the Federal Government is living beyond its income.

Contemporary Miracles?

From Time

In World War I, many a devout Briton believed that, during the Battle of Mons, August 23, 1914, a heavenly host of angels appeared on the side of the British Contemptibles whose magnificent rifle fire was almost as effective as that of a machine gun, and saved them from complete annihilation. World War II has begun sprouting its crop of miracles. Last week's:

Fighting north of Lake Laatokka in Finland, a Finnish officer and nine men saw an angel in the sky facing Russia, its arms outstretched to protect the Finns.

Polish refugees who reached Budapest reported that in Bromberg a Nazi shot a young Polish priest who had just administered Extreme Unction. As he fell, his hands, with holy oil on them, struck a wall. A clear impression of the hands materialized on the wall, remained even after Nazis repeatly attempted to paint it out.

A Mennonite missionary in China told how a Japanese pilot, leading a covey of ten bombers, found his way barred by a multitude of angels with drawn swords. He turned back, was later executed for insubordination.

To "Fellow Traveler"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In reply to the letter of the person signing himself "Fellow Traveler" in The Post of January 11.

What and where is this "World of Tomorrow" toward which he is trying to herd us all? Is it Russia? And who is to be the benign ruler of the same? Stalin? And are we all to be Communists, who, according to this "Fellow Traveler" are "the real defenders of peace and the rights of the people?" The same kind of defense Stalin is trying to hand to little Finland?

This is a fine time Fellow Traveler has picked to bolster Stalinism, when nation after nation is pointing the finger of shame and ridicule at the Russian fiasco in Finland.

Let me remind Fellow Traveler that it is well for him that the United States tolerates such stuff as he, and a few others of his kin, are permitted to place before the public.

I might suggest that if the trend of affairs over in Finland continue in the direction they are going now Stalin may find it expedient to draft him, and his "fellows" here, to come over and help him—or try to—lick Finland.

The Murphy Appointment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Frank Murphy, as Governor of Michigan, effected a suspension of the people's constitutional guaranties when he aided and abetted the lawless sit-down strike in the motor industry. By flouting the courts Murphy fixed in American life and government the Communist sit-down strike and its Communist child, the slow-down strike.

President Roosevelt talks much of the "mandates of the people" as the well-spring of his acts. The people of Michigan threw Murphy out of office the very first chance they got at the polls after he betrayed them in the sit-down surrender. Only President Roosevelt of all modern politicians this side of the Atlantic Ocean would have had the gall to exalt Murphy, in the face of that mandate.

International Picture

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

As the picture is now daily developing of a constantly enlarged world conflagration, is it not over-optimistic to assume that nothing can, or will, happen to us or our interests? We may not be attacked—most probably will not be, but, aside from direct attack, many things can happen to our ships, our possessions, our nationals abroad—in this war of attrition and reprisal, which it would be easy to conclude that no red-blooded American can, or should, stand for.

And, it seems to me, that in event of any such suddenly arising contretemps, we would be well advised, not only to remember our past experiences in international meddling, but also that our President has promised to keep us out of war, and undoubtedly will, if at all possible so to do; also, that our Department of State possesses sources of information from all parts of the world, which is not available to us, but which has kept us out of many a bootless undertaking, which could only spell misery and regret for this and generations to follow.

Penalty For Defeat?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The brave and energetic soldiers of Finland have met in battle the invading army of Russia and hurled them back in Stonewall Jackson style.

In 1861, after the Battle of Bull Run, Stonewall Jackson and Turner Ashby outdid Napoleon in the rapidity of their smashing blows in quick succession, in which they defeated in turn Shields, Milroy and Banks, and drove them out of the Shenandoah Valley, at Harpers Ferry.

These three Federal generals were not called up before Abraham Lincoln to be shot, as may happen to the Red generals.

Element Of Competition

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

May the suggestion be offered that the "most favored nation" clause in commercial treaties be very carefully used, or entirely dispensed with, and that more particular concern be given to the cost of production of each imported article.

Commercial treaties, through their tariff charges on competing goods, are largely for the protection of our home producer—industrialist and wage-earner. But, besides, our democracy should have in mind aid to the workers everywhere. Therefore, comparative costs should be taken into account, and relative tariffs be assessed.

Our Government should not aim to encourage sale to our consumers of products of peon labor—both in the interest of our workers and that of the workers in other lands where fair wages and a high standard of living exist.

The element of competition should apply alone in the comparative quality of the article offered our consumers: this to apply to our productions, as to those of all the world.

American Music

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

One of the most significant features of the notable cultural activity in this country today is the development of an American school of music composition. It is the common remark of students that have been abroad in recent years that Europe has gone perfectly sterile of worth while new music, whereas in America creation has never been so active or so worthy. It is not too much to say that the best music of recent years has been produced in the America that was traditionally assumed to be incapable of art.

We have a large and increasing group of American composers whose works are really of the first order of merit. But the fact remains but little known and the composers find only a limited encouragement because our grand orchestras, for some reason, still seem to avoid American music as if it were a pestilence.

This ought not to be. American orchestras should diligently foster American music. Our own National Symphony here in Washington could easily take the lead in this most desirable work. It appears upon reviewing its programs so far that of all the music it has played only 8 per cent was by American composers. I suggest that Dr. Kindler consider this remarkable opportunity and play an occasional concert of recent American works.

In Defense Of Millions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In reply to the letter signed by T. H. Russell, which rants about a fine gentleman (Mr. W. Averill Harriman), does not this sound like a socialist?

Were it not for the millions of dollars put in circulation by Mr. Harriman, and other men of his station, many thousands of working men would have no employment.

Granted this money is inherited, one has to admit it takes real brains to keep intact such a huge fortune. Also, Mr. Harriman is a great humanitarian, and does a great deal of charitable work about which he is very modest.

If, as Mr. Russell suggests, this money were divided equally among millions of hard-working men, it would probably last them about a week, after which it would be back in the hands of some other businessman who furnishes goods the people needed. Then what would these working men do for a living, with Mr. Harriman's millions gone?

Resolutions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Before throwing away Christmas cards why not hunt up some friends you have not seen for a year, give them a call on the phone or, better still, pay them a visit. You have no idea until you have tried it the pleasure one can get from giving pleasure to others in this way.

Another New Year's resolution is to spread peace whenever it can be done. It was never more needed than now. Let us talk in terms of peace, not war.

Disliked "Ninotchka"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Saturday I went to see "Ninotchka," partly as a result of your praise of the movie. When I went into the theater I expected a clever, even though reactionary satire on the Soviet Union. And really, I was never so disappointed in a movie.

There were, naturally, a number of funny spots but after the first half-hour or so, I couldn't any longer keep myself from a feeling of disgust. And that's really the word to describe my reactions.

There is a lot of humor in the technique of exaggeration but when exaggeration is carried far enough it passes the realm of comedy and becomes boredom. And when the same gag (even though it be funny one time) is repeated in various forms for an hour and a half, it adds irritation to boredom.

That sort of fault would ordinarily mean no more than a wasted evening and the cost of an admission ticket but in the case of "Ninotchka" there was added an additional irritant: a "social message" whose function was that of supplementing, or at least of bolstering, the stock array of anti-Soviet prejudices which already pollute the air.

Starving Russians (whose government can somehow afford magnificent airline and hotel facilities for them)! A Marxist whose concept of love and sex is one of "chemistry." (Shades of "the nationalization of women!") Three Soviet agents (with the savoir faire of the Marx brothers) pawning royal jewels to supplement Russia's wheat crop (the biggest in history)!

The Post Impressionist

First Day

In the good old days of bathtub gin we found ourself suddenly and mysteriously working on a newspaper. We stumbled into our reportorial career in the same fashion we have stumbled into subsequent enterprises. The fact is we tired of working about this time and when the opportunity arose of making $18 a week for having fun, we took the job on the Philadelphia Ledger.

Like thousands of frustrated "writers," we had a secret hankering to get on a newspaper, the theory being we would then be getting paid for something we had been doing anyhow.

After all, we had been scribbling for years, often in dingy, squalid garrets which neophytes for some inexplicable reason associate with good "writing." In addition, we knew we were a genius and the world should be apprised of the fact.

The city room, that first day, was a mad house and we had an almost irrepressible desire to take flight. Bells jangled incessantly; people shouted; the spacious place was littered with paper and little boys ran screaming all over the place. It was a frightening spectacle, but we were too proud to display our emotions and accordingly regained our innate composure. In fact we became cocky forthwith.

We could not understand these people, these young men and women all banging furiously at typewriters and shouting simultaneously, "great story, swell stuff." We learned later they were referring to either their own stories or those of their colleagues. One fellow, his hat slouched partly in movie fashion, had difficulty hitting the keys. He was tipsy and we admired him.

We were told to sit around awhile, a feat not difficult of accomplishment for us who had been sitting around for many years. They told us it would be years before we could be like one of those rewrite men and that aroused the Irish in us. We champed at the bit, growing more restless with each day.

In a far off corner we wrote of imaginary fires, thefts and murders. We knew it was better stuff than they had in the paper. A girl reporter who had taken a fancy to us even admitted that.

This girl must have studied under Dale Carnegie long before that estimable gentleman became popular. In a short time she supported our conviction that we were a genius and a great "writer." If only they would give us a chance.

She had us thinking we were Thackeray, Balzac and Victor Hugo all wrapped into one. Years later we learned the poor child was a trifle screwy and she wound up in the nut house. At this time, however, we were not aware of her mental aberrations and we swallowed her encomia with great eagerness and much satisfaction.

Came the day of our first assignment. We were sent to a nearby police station to get some further facts on a murder case. Apologetically and with a meekness unknown to reporters we stood before the police sergeant's desk, quaking in our well-polished boots. We had none of the earmarks of the reporter.

Our hair was combed and we looked pretty spiffy in a clean shirt and pressed trousers. "Please, sir," we began, our voice scarcely audible, "could you help us out with some facts about the X-murder case." Loud guffaws of laughter greeted our query. We ran out, ashamed, dejected and thoroughly whipped.

We bungled that case completely and the opposition papers got a clean scoop on the details we were sent for. But the incident had the effect of a spiritual cleansing. It took us down a peg. We were not so smart after that.

A few days later they gave us another chance to retrieve our lost pride. We were sent to cover a small businessmen's meeting. With renewed courage and high hopes we set out from the city room, happy in the thought that our day had come. They told us to write our story, a concession we mistook for competence on our part. Our reassurance was returning? We'd show them this time.

On the way to the meeting we thought of Dickens and how he started as a reporter. In a few years we would make Dickens look like a piker. This first assignment to write our own story was merely the groundwork for the great novel we had in mind for years. It would be a pushover.

When we returned to the city room we labored three hours over four paragraphs which we recall vividly began, "Plans for the, etc., etc." The first draft ran into four pages of copy. We instinctively realized the story did not merit that space, so we set about attempting to cut it down. After two hours of great effort we had the story down to a page and a half of copy. Even that was too much. Finally, we had the story down to four paragraphs.

On the way over to the city editor's desk we felt sure the story was page one stuff. We were highly elated. We had mastered newspaper technique in the short space of six months. Nothing could hold us back now and tomorrow we would start the novel.

The city editor took the piece of copy paper, looked up at us over his horn rimmed glasses. It took him a second to read the copy and we thought he was doing our masterpiece an injustice. We felt hurt, but only momentarily for we knew 100,000 people would be reading it in print tomorrow. We awaited the word of approbation. Instead, the city editor took the paper, tore it nearly into bits, dropped them into the wastepaper basket at his side, and looked at us with scorn mingled with pity. We have been deflated ever since.

Union Discipline

A BIG MEETING of the Union of Variety Artists was momentarily upset by cries of "throw him out," evoked by a simple request by a member for an accounting. Chairs were pushed back and, according to the New York World-Telegram's account, "a brawl seemed imminent" until a union officer, sighting a microphone which was not in use at the moment, cried, "Nobody is going to be thrown out," and calmed the storm. Just how it happened that there was an unoccupied microphone in a congress of crooners, moaners and masters of ceremonies, the story did not explain. Probably it will just have to be set down as a miracle arranged for the preservation of the Union of Variety Artists. It would not happen more than once in a thousand years.

However, the fact that a meeting of night club entertainers—a rather harmless, if irritating, tribe of toilers—was saved from riotous disorder only by a miracle points to a serious weakness in organized labor in both of the big houses.

The C. I. O. as well as the A. F. of L. actors are remarkably intelligent. They can be taught to perform amazingly difficult tricks, including recitations and songs. There is a school of thought which holds that mere instinct, rather than intelligence, accounts for all this, pointing out that the actor gets food, raiment and applause for performing well, but the same type of argument could be applied to furriers and teamsters.

Intimidation Perils Freedom Of Workers

IN FACT, the only more or less human creatures who do get paid, fed, clothed and applauded for performing badly are politicians. It would be a sorry thing to admit that politicians are the only beings whose actions are guided by intelligence rather than instinct. But, whether they have intelligence or not, actors are gentle and well-behaved, in public at least, by comparison with most other types, and still their union meeting almost reached the brawling point when a member asked for an accounting.

In a day when more and more groups of workers, unfamiliar with union procedure, are being organized under pressure of the bitter competition between the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L., intimidation of the rank and file and assumption of power by enterprising unioneers present a serious peril to the freedom of the workers, individually and in the mass.

Most ordinary citizens, even including longshoremen, who enjoy a rough-and-tumble reputation, are bashful and timid in meetings. As to the ruggedness of the longshoremen, it may be pointed out that for years it was customary for a few rodent racketeers to run them off the docks at will and that giants among them meekly obeyed mysterious commands from a few hoodlums, emphasized by an occasional broken leg or killing.

Muscles Control Union Discipline

UNION MEETINGS are supposed to be parliaments, but union discipline and character are such that individuals, arising to speak in opposition to the policies of the officers or a minority of planted hecklers or thugs, are put in fear of humiliation, at least and injury, expulsion or death in certain types of unions.

It has been the habit to smile mischievously and say that, after all, union meetings are congresses of horny-handed roughnecks whose language is blunt and whose hides are thick. That tradition has been imposed upon to the detriment of the dues-paying roughnecks themselves and to the benefit of unioneering and patriotteering grafters in the official list, and even of notorious criminals who muscle into unions and buy off interference by the big parent bodies by delivering votes in the big union elections.

The pattern closely resembles that of our civil government and politics, with the important difference, however, that the big unions have nothing corresponding to the Department of Justice, the police or even the county prosecutors to preserve the purity of the ballot and the rights of the members. The union system creates great power but provides no means to prevent or punish abuse of power.

Bashful Workers Invite Exploitation

THE RANK AND FILE sucker is easily howled down and, unless he has the peculiar gall of the born wind-jammer, he sits quiet while his rights are voted away, or doesn't even bother to attend meetings, knowing that they will be voted away, anyhow, and in some unions that persons unknown will follow him home and bend a ball bat over his head.

Inexperienced, unacquainted and, to use the proper word, bashful thousands of newly organized workers invite exploitation by predatory unioneers as harmful as exploitation by the most brutal employers and violence no different from that inflicted in the bad old days by the mercenary agency guards and strike-breakers. If the big union organizations can't protect the members from their own unions there is a power than can and eventually will be forced to.

The State Primaries

By Mark Sullivan

President's Silence Is Embarrassing

IN WASHINGTON this week occurred an incident which put pressure on President Roosevelt to state his position about a third nomination. This first incident will be followed by others. Increasingly, and with the certainty of law and the calendar, Mr. Roosevelt will be put under pressure to say either that he won't, or that he will—or else practice a silence which will amount to equivocation, and be interpreted as consent.

This first episode had to do with Ohio. To understand the incident, it is necessary to understand the Ohio primary law.

Under Ohio law, any person wishing to run for delegate to a national convention must file "a statement in writing signed by him in which he shall state his . . . choice for nomination as candidate of his party for the Presidency of the United States."

If that were all of the Ohio law it would not necessarily put any pressure upon President Roosevelt. Candidates, for delegate in the Ohio primaries could merely say they are for Mr. Roosevelt, or for Mr. Garner, or for Mr. Hull—they could use any name they choose.

Roosevelt Silence Hurts Ohio Aspirants

BUT THE OHIO law goes further. It not only requires candidates for delegate to make a written statement. The law puts a requirement upon candidates for the Presidential nomination. The Ohio law says: "The name of no candidate for the Presidency shall be used without his written consent."

That means that no one in Ohio can run for election as a "Roosevelt delegate" to the Democratic National Convention unless he has first gotten Mr. Roosevelt's consent in writing.

So much is law. The rest of the incident in Washington this week is newspaper record, well verified.

The Washington correspondent of the Toledo, Ohio, Blade, Mr. W. H. Mylander, in the course of his duties, keeps vigilant watch on Ohio politicians who visit Washington. Mr. Mylander learned that a group of Ohio Democrats want to run as "Roosevelt delegates"; that they inquired whether Mr. Roosevelt would give the legally required "written consent"; and that they got no conclusive answer. They gathered, directly or indirectly, or else they surmised by their own reasoning, that Mr. Roosevelt thinks it is still too early to show his hand.

An account of the incident was published. Subsequently, at a press conference, Mr. Roosevelt was asked what reply he had given the Ohio Democrats. He said he had told them neither one thing nor the other. By his manner, he seemed to think it was still a good joke, another escape from saying anything definite about his intentions.

THE OHIO aspirants to be "Roosevelt delegates," if their inference is that Mr. Roosevelt may yet be willing, could still manage to support Mr. Roosevelt in the convention, (assuming they are elected.) The process is indirect and awkward, but entirely practicable and wholly without invasion of the law. They could announce themselves as being for some "favorite son," such as Senator "Vic" Donahey, for example. That would comply with the Ohio law. Then, when the convention meets, they could hope or anticipate that Mr. Donahey would not win, that he would lose out in the early balloting, leaving them free to be for Mr. Roosevelt, assuming Mr. Roosevelt is known to be willing at the time the convention meets.

That is practicable. Yet it is likely Mr. Roosevelt will be put under pressure again, from Ohio and from other States. The date of the Ohio primary is May 14. The written declarations of candidates for delegate must be made 60 days earlier, March 15. Between now and March 15, either this same group of Ohio aspirants for delegate, or other aspirants, are apt to again put pressure upon Mr. Roosevelt to find if he is willing to make the required written statement.

Not only Ohio. In other States, the primary laws vary—hardly any two are alike. But many have provisions which amount to requiring that candidates for delegate name their choice for the Presidential nomination. Some have provisions which make it either legally obligatory or politically most desirable that candidates for the Presidential nomination say whether or not they are willing.

President Brews Many Embarrassments

THE STATE primaries begin with New Hampshire on March 12, and continue until early June. The dates when the intentions of Presidential candidates should be known are several weeks in advance of the dates for the holding of primaries. Repeatedly, from now until early June, Mr. Roosevelt will be put under some degree of the same kind of pressure that was put upon him from Ohio.

Mr. Roosevelt is brewing many embarrassments. Some are for himself—assuming it is an embarrassment he is creating, and not a situation consciously designed, whether by himself or persons close to him. However that may be, for others, for Democratic leaders of every degree, Mr. Roosevelt is creating extreme embarrassment. Many Democratic leaders, national and local, want to take a stand for someone for the Presidential nomination. But they cannot do this without first knowing Mr. Roosevelt's intention. Many a Democratic dignitary might find solace for his perplexity in two lines of verse:

"We know what Heaven or Hell will bring,
But who can know the mind of the king?"

The Thrill That Comes Once in a Lifetime

Wallace Sees Plot to Scuttle Trade Pacts in 'Tariff Grab'

Grange Used, He Holds

In reply to questions by Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, he said that he Grange, "not knowing they are being used as a cat's paw," are favoring lower industrial duties and higher rates on imported farm products. He added: "It is a very unfortunate position for a farm organization to be in."

Representative Reed (Republican), of New York, told both Hull and Wallace they were working at cross purposes. Wallace trying to reduce $313,000,000 worth of surplus farm goods, while the Hull program was "nullifying" this by encouraging importations.

"I never have been able to see the conflict," said Wallace. "I think the two programs are definitely complementary. We are helped as the trade agreements program finds us increased markets abroad."

Wallace had several sharp tilts with Republican members. He declined to answer once when Reed asked him if he was as sure that trade agreement farm imports were not hurtful as he once was about "the cotton program making a paradise out of the South."

"I never made any such statement (on cotton)," said Wallace. "Deny your major premise, sir."

"Well," said Reed, "if you are going to quibble——"

"What do you want, a diagram?" shot back Knutson.

Once when Wallace said that as an Iowan he was pleased with the reduction in the Canadian tariff on hogs, Knutson asked:

"Is that why they're selling lard in Iowa at 5 cents a pound?

"Your question is foolish," snapped Wallace. "The tariff has nothing to do with the matter."

"All right, all right," said Knutson, and smoothed matters over with a tribute to Wallace as a witness.

Following Hull's earlier attack on tariff "lobbying," Knutson asked Wallace if it wasn't true that people were "lobbying" for the program.

"The only people I know who are protesting are the farmers," said Knutson.

Hull Berates Lobbyists

"I don't mind being deviled by lobbyists on the outside, but I am a little disappointed to find so meaningless obstructions on the inside," said Hull.

Later he said he thought tariff lobbying "smells to high heaven." Questioned further by Representative Woodruff (Republican), of Michigan, on what would happen if the program were abandoned, Hull said:

"As long as every dark place in the Capitol is frequented by lobbyists, you would have the same experience you had with the Smoot-Hawley bill."

Hull said he wasn't impunging Congress, because he thought it was free of corrupt influences. But he said the lobbyists prevail on members "by sending all kinds of misleading material to their constituents."

Gearhart declared the program had failed to bring farm income back to the former $12,000,000,000 level. Hull replied that the farmers have been increasingly better off since the trade act was instituted and their income will be further improved.

"In spite of your nobility of purpose, the farmer now receives a much lower amount proportionately than in other years," said the California Republican.

"It would have fallen off much more without the program," Hull insisted.

Legality Attacked

Gearhart charged a provision in the Columbian trade agreement exempting goods imported under the agreement from local taxation was unconstitutional. He charged an "arrogant assumption of legislative authority" in agreements binding some articles on the free list for the duration of the pacts.

As Hull defended the constitutionality of the agreements, Representative McCormack interrupted at one point to complain that Gearhart was being unfair.

"I sometimes think," said Hull, "that those who are persistently inquiring on the constitutional matter are more interested in preserving the protective tariff than in preserving the purity of our Constitution."

Sees Ratification Approval

Denver, Jan. 12 (AP).—Representative Harry B. Coffee, Nebraska stockman, predicted today the House would approve an amendment he has sponsored, requiring Senate ratification of reciprocal trade agreements.

"Coalition between those who are opposed to the reciprocal trade agreements program and those who favor Senate ratification can muster sufficient support in the House to pass the amendment," Coffee told the forty-third convention of the American National Live Stock Association.

Coffee disputed testimony by Secretary Hull and Secretary Wallace before the House Ways and Means Committee that agriculture has not been damaged by existing reciprocal trade agreements.

He contended agriculture's share in United States exports has declined steadily since 1922, when farm products accounted for 50 per cent of $3,765,000,000 in exports.

"In 1938 we exported a little over $3,000,000,000 worth of products, of which only 27.1 per cent was agricultural."

On contrast, the Nebraskan asserted agriculture commodities accounted for 46.4 per cent of 1938 imports from foreign countries and half of the agricultural imports were competitive.

to Martin, and added, "Mr. Ford never said more than the single word 'hello' to Martin as he passed him in one of the corridors out here."

And the United Press said Martin in Detroit called Elder "an unmitigated liar."

Soon after the close of yesterday's hearing, NLRB Counsel Charles Fahy said that Elder's affidavit was "made public four months ago" and a copy was transmitted by the board's Detroit regional director to the main office here.

"Neither the board nor any of its agents had anything to do with this affidavit," Fahy stated.

Toland explained to the committee that the document had been taken from the board's files on a pending case involving the Ford company in St. Louis. This case, on which hearings closed in April, 1938, has not yet been decided by the NLRB.

On the ground that a letter attached to the affidavit bore the pencilled initials "J. W. M.," Representative Halleck (Republican), of Indiana, charged that Chairman J. Warren Madden had "probably" seen the material, although it was received long after the Ford hearings were concluded.

Tells of Meeting in May

In the affidavit, Elder, who described himself as a former vice president of a St. Louis local of the U. A. W. A., alleged that last May he had accompanied Martin to Bennett's office in the Ford Administration Building in Detroit.

(At this time, Martin had already left the C. I. O., and was affiliating his faction of the U. A. W. with the A. F. of L.)

There, said Elder, "Martin told me, in Bennett's presence, that . . . he had his resignation already written out and that when he intended to resign Ford and Bennett sent for him. He said that they told him that they had looked up his record and investigated his life and were satisfied with him.

"He said they had asked him not to resign, stating that they knew they had to deal with some union and that they would prefer to deal with him."

Elder charged that after mentioning Ford's promise of financial help, Martin stated "that he couldn't carry on without such help. When Martin said this to me, Bennett said nothing."

On this occasion, the affidavit continued, Martin told Bennett he needed $3,500, but Bennett said he did not know how much was left in a certain fund. When he found out, Elder quoted Bennett as saying, "he would get in touch with Martin."

"Boy, I Got It!"

The next day, said Elder, Martin conferred in his own hotel room with "John Gillespie, of the Ford Motor Co."

"When we were outside of the hotel, Martin banged one fist against another stating, 'Boy, I got it! Got it! Got it!' He seemed very much pleased. He showed me a pack of bills . . . He put these bills in an inside pocket where they bulged out quite noticeably," the affidavit alleged.

Elder declared that soon after he was hired by Martin in February, 1939, as an organizer at $50 a week, plus $6 daily for expenses, Martin told him "there are a lot of people that he wanted to 'take care of.'"

In the affidavit, Elder alleged that the union leader "proposed that I take some 'boys' and some guns and make a raid on the Communist Party headquarters (in Detroit) . . . I told him that I would not do this on $50 a week and expenses.

"Martin told me that he wanted me to 'get' a number of men whose names he gave me . . . He told me that he did not want these men killed, just put in the hospital, break a couple of arms, etc. I told him that I would not do this job unless I was given help and some real money. He gave me the sum of $250 to go to St. Louis to get some boys to help out and to get some guns."

Strong-Arm Tactics Alleged

Martin also asked him to break into a printing plant to get the U. A. W.-C. I. O. mailing list, Elder alleged, adding that "we never went through with this proposal."

Elder said he was "laid off" last June with "about four weeks pay coming." He said, "There is owing to me in all at the present time about $275."

The affidavit alleged that Bennett and Martin conferred on a pending court case involving the rival A. F. of L. and C. I. O. factions of the Automobile Workers Union. Judges were discussed, and "I recall that during this conversation Bennett told Martin that the case was 'in the bag,'" said Elder.

Bennett told a "Mr. Lindquist, who I understand was the labor relations man for the Murray Body Corporation," that that firm "should line up with Homer Martin," Elder charged. He also quoted Bennett as stating he was "putting pressure" on various parts manufacturers, to the end that they make contracts with Martin's union.

In a strike in Flint last June, "Martin brought 12 or 15 men from Kansas City, Mo. . . . to do strong-arm work against the C. I. O. men during the strike," Elder alleged.

The affidavit further stated that in Detroit Martin "met with Gerald L. K. Smith," self-styled successor to Huey Long, and that they arranged that announcements of a Smith radio broadcast would be sent to the membership of Martin's union—"but it wouldn't appear where the cards came from," Martin allegedly said.

Elder also quoted Martin to the effect that he had been offered a building by Father Coughlin, but he could not take it, "since there were strings attached to it and . . . there would be too much heat put on if he took it."

"On a couple of occasions Martin told me that Henry Ford is behind Father Coughlin," the affidavit concluded.

The document was produced while Mrs. Ann Landy Wolf, NLRB review attorney, was on the stand. Mrs. Wolf, who is handling the Ford case for the board, testified that she had not seen the affidavit before.

Today And Tomorrow

Crisis Or Modus Vivendi With Japan

AFTER January 26 Congress will have the right to impose an embargo on trade between the United States and Japan, and there is no doubt that former Secretary Henry L. Stimson speaks for an influential and well-informed body of opinion when he urges Congress to exercise that right. The question is as delicate as it is complex. In arguing, as I shall venture to do in this article, that this is not the proper time for Congress to exercise its right to impose an embargo, I do not differ from Mr. Stimson in his moral judgment of the Japanese aggression or in his conception of the political responsibilities of the United States.

But I do think he is mistaken in defining the issue as if our own choices were to acquiesce shamefully in the immediate conquest of China, or to challenge Japan's power to continue the war by such drastic measures that we shall be seeking to encompass the downfall of the military party. There is, I hope, another alternative, which is to postpone the crisis.

For it seems to me that in view of the total situation in the world, it is not now expedient to take action which will bring Far Eastern affairs to a crisis. It seems to me wiser, providing the Japanese do not themselves precipitate a crisis, to seek a modus vivendi which will postpone a settlement of the Far Eastern question.

United States Lacks Two-Ocean Navy

THE COMPELLING reason, I believe, for not precipitating a crisis in the Far East is that the United States does not now possess a two-ocean navy, and there is no prospect of our being able to construct such a navy within the next five, probably within the next ten, years. There are at present only two navies in the Pacific, the Japanese and the American, and though the American navy is somewhat stronger than the Japanese, it is by no means strong enough to control the Pacific Ocean. The United States should never, I believe, adopt a policy which might lead to war unless it can command the seas where the war would be fought. In the absence of, say, eight British capital ships based on Singapore, the Japanese navy is capable of producing a very uncomfortable situation in the Philippines, the Netherlands Indies, and in the whole Western Pacific generally.

But even if the American navy is capable of holding the Japanese navy in check, the operation would engage virtually our whole naval power. We should have no navy in the Atlantic Ocean. Now there is a great war in the Atlantic. In this war Nazi Germany and its ally, Soviet Russia, have not yet struck with all their force against Great Britain. They may not strike. If they strike, we may believe that they will fail. But we have no right to assume that they will fail. If they succeed in destroying British naval power, we must not place ourselves in a position with our navy maybe so deeply engaged in the far Pacific that we have no naval force in the Atlantic with which to guard our interests in this hemisphere.

So I submit that it is unwise to precipitate a crisis in the Far East as long as Britain's naval power is challenged in the Atlantic, as long as Britain is unable to send capital ships to the Pacific.

Japan Knows U. S. Does Not Seek War

MR. STIMSON holds the opinion that a spectacular challenge to Japan by a Congressional embargo would not lead to war with Japan. He says that "the very last thing which the Japanese government desires is a war with the United States."

I think Mr. Stimson may be right. But the danger is not that Japan will declare war if Congress imposes an embargo; the danger is that Japan, relying upon the fact that the United States does not wish to go to war, is not really prepared to go to war, and, in view of the European situation ought not to go to war, will be driven by resentment and necessity to commit new aggressions in the belief that it is safe to do so.

These aggressions might very easily create a situation where, in order to undo them, war would be inevitable eventually,—where, immediately, the American Navy would be pinned down so closely in the Pacific that no ships could be spared if there is a catastrophe in the Atlantic.

Embargo Would Be Open Defiance

FOR WE MUST remember, I think, that a Congressional embargo would be nothing less than an open defiance of Japan, and, for reasons of prestige alone, Japan is bound to take reprisals somewhere unless we are prepared to follow the embargo with even more drastic measures in order to prevent reprisals. A nation can adopt measures "short of war" only if it is prepared, if necessary, to go to war. If we challenge Japan in this open fashion, and yet persuade her that we are not going to war if she commits new aggressions, then we shall in fact be first provoking and then inviting Japan to commit new aggressions.

This does not mean that we need to go on supplying Japan with substantial quantities of "arms, munitions, and the raw materials out of which arms are made." Ways and means can, I feel sure, be devised to reduce this traffic without resorting to the spectacular challenge of a Congressional debate leading to a Congressional embargo. We have an armament program of our own. The Allies and many neutrals need armaments. By administrative action their needs can be given priority over the Japanese orders. If legislation is needed to achieve this end, let it be based on the prior needs of our own government and of our friends rather than upon an open challenge to Japan. Substantially the same result can be achieved without defying Japanese opinion in such a way that any Japanese government would have to make an equally spectacular reply.

Chinese Resistance Must Be Kept Alive

CONCURRENTLY we can explore by negotiation, but in no great haste, the problem of a general settlement in the Far East. This will be easier to do if the Chinese resistance can be kept going until the European war is over. And since we have every legal right to make a loan to China, we should not be afraid to make one.

But we should not provoke a crisis and we should play for time, time for China to resist, time for Britain and France to return to the Far East. For Japan and the United States alone cannot settle the Far Eastern question. China must be a party to the settlement. So, obviously, must Great Britain and France; and so must the Netherlands. We shall do wisely, therefore, to help the Chinese, to obstruct the Japanese conquest but not to challenge the Japanese nation, and to tell the Japanese frankly and openly that it is our policy to get along with them as best we can until there can be a thoroughgoing settlement, with all the parties concerned represented, at the end of the European war.

The Once Over

An Annual Report

To Our Stockholders: Your officers are glad to report business over the last year has been vastly improved; in fact we almost broke even. Conditions over the 12 months were spotty. This was also true of your officers. And if you had been on the spot as much as they you would be spotty.

We feel that much of the company's success during 1939 was due to a more vigorous policy of trying to make the best of it all. It has been the custom of the company officers to worry too much. Under the new policy 70 per cent of our officers have cut their fretting down 86⅓ per cent for the fiscal year.

We have instituted a new set-up for 1940, under which it will be possible to spread the responsibilities of company management, and under this set-up the company president will listen to only one fireside chat a year, the others being listened to by three vice presidents in charge of radio reception.

Your company was able to get a little work done around the plant in 1939 by naming six vice presidents in charge of visits from axe agents, thus saving the higher executives a major amount of time. We built a new wing onto the factory in which all data, facts, figures, reports, explanations and apologies demanded by the Government may be prepared and turned out. This plant is capable of answering 500,000 inquiries from Washington per week. Plans are being drawn for a half million dollar annex in which all summonses to Congressional probes can be received, filled and catalogued without confusion.

The company has also appointed a vice president in charge of nervousness, a vice president in charge of apprehensions and two vice presidents in charge of grave misgivings.

Orders during 1939 reached the highest peak since 1929, unless we are merely standing in a hole and getting a wrong slant on altitude.

Our cash position is strong, due to a new system of loose-leaf, loose-thinking and loose-figuring type of bookkeeping, now becoming quite the rage everywhere. We think this means a lot of good clean fun until we change auditors. Our inventory is not heavy, in fact a child could lift it. Our backlog is good, and how is yours?

Getting down to figures our losses for 1939 were $2,358,456 as against $3,567,823 for 1938. This makes it a banner year.

Summary: The general outlook is good. Car loadings are doing nicely. Boat loadings are firm. Auto loadings are improving. Bicycle loadings are nothing to be sneezed at. Our stockholders will be glad to hear that after a suspension of the custom over the lean years we have decided to renew distribution of art calendars to all stockholders.

Please notify the company of any change of address so that you may be kept in touch with all bad news.

Bughouse fables: Once upon a time the National Labor Relations Board held a hearing and gave the boss a break.

Lord Beaverbrook says England had a distinct understanding from the United States that we never would expect her to pay her war debts to us. He insists that we confidentially agreed to waive the debts. Britannia rules the waivers, in a manner of speaking.

Progressives to Seek Seats in Congress

Madison, Wis., Jan. 12 (AP).—Former Gov. Philip F. La Follette, who returned yesterday from a vacation in Mexico, said today the National Progressives of America would seek to elect several United States Senators and Representatives to Congress this year.

La Follette announced formation of N. P. A. here in April, 1938. He said the party would have tickets in several States of the Far West and Far East, but that it would be premature to name them now.

Rats Outnumber U. S. Humans, 2-1

Rats outnumber the human population of America by two to one, and each rat does at least $2 worth of damage, annually—to a total of $500,000,000.

These facts are shown in a report to the American Chemical Society on the development of insecticides.

America, the report showed, is inhabited by nearly 80,000 different kinds of insect. At least 10,000 species are pests of more or less importance. The damage caused by these reaches $1,601,520,000, said the report.

Agricultural and horticultural pests cost the Federal Government $2,000,000 annually in research. Growers pay approximately $200,000,000 a year for insecticides and fumigants.

Comdr. Corley Is Life Member Of Bridge League

Lieut. Comdr. W. A. Corley, retired, former president of the Washington Bridge League, has received notification of his election to honorary life membership in the American Contract Bridge League.

Commander Corley served three terms as president of the local bridge association and was afterwards elected a life member of its executive committee. He was instrumental in bringing the National Championships to this city in 1937.

At the present time he is devoting his energies to promoting the charity card parties sponsored by The Washington Post and Station WJSV for the maintenance of the Blood and Serum Bank at Children's Hospital.

'Desert Song' and a New 'Rat' Score at Earle: 'Swanee River,' at Palace, Stars Foster Music

"BROTHER RAT AND A BABY." Warner Brothers' picturization of an original screen play by John Monks, jr., and Fred F. Finklehoffe, featuring Priscilla Lane, Wayne Morris, Jane Bryan, Eddie Albert, Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan, with Baby Peter B. Good. Arthur Treacher, Moroni Olsen, Jessie Busley, Larry Williams, Berton Churchill, Nana Bryant, Paul Harvey, Mayo Methot and Ed Gargan. Directed by Ray Enright. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

There is a remarkably well-balanced bill at the Warner Brothers' Earl Theater this week. The running time of the program is almost evenly divided between Sigmund Romberg's operetta of "The Desert Song," in condensed, but not butchered, form, and "Brother Rat and a Baby," a cyclonic screen farce by John Monks, jr., and Fred F. Finklehoffe, authors of the original "Brother Rat," that achieved such eminent success both as a stage comedy and later in film form.

BELL

Production Manager Harry Anger has worked something of a minor miracle in the staging of the tabloid version of "The Desert Song." Enough of the book has been retained to present a coherent story and all of the many melody gems of the original score remain practically intact. Furthermore, the piece is exceptionally well sung and acted with competence, although the abridgement of the book has reduced the necessity for sustained characterization or the creation of any mood beyond the alternate romantic and comic movements of the story of northern Africa.

Some Excellent Voices

The roles of the "Red Shadow" and Margot bring the fine voices of Ray Heatherton and Ethel Taylor, tenor and soprano, respectively, to the Earle stage this week and both are decidedly worth hearing. The comedy parts of Bennie and Susan are done more than ordinary justice by Fred Lightner, a veteran at this sort of thing, and June Havoc, a slightly grotesque composite of Fannie Brice and Charlotte Greenwood. Jack Kitly, the Capt. Fontaine; Byrd Byron, Sid-El-Kar; John Clark, Gen. Birabeau; Helen Gray, as Asuri, and The Robbins, as desert tumblers, contribute notably to a colorfully staged series of scenes, to which The Virginians, in the singing ensembles, and the Roxyettes, in flashy drilling and dancing routines, lend life and action.

"Brother Rat and a Baby" is a rollicking item, contrived to make fun rather than sense. The boys and girls first encountered at V. M. I., are a year or two older now and trying to get along in the world—all trying, that is, except that prodigious bungler, Billy Randolph, who manufacturers make trouble to the minute than the dictators of Europe. Money is the chief source of difficulty in the present panic. The devices by which it is produced are weird and wonderful to behold.

Life of Foster Filmer in Technicolor With Ameche, Jolson, Andrea Leeds Starred

"SWANEE RIVER." Twentieth Century-Fox Technicolor picturization of a screen play by John Taintor Foote and Philip Dunne, featuring Don Ameche, Andrea Leeds and Al Jolson, with Felix Bressart, Russell Hicks, George Reed, Richard Clarke, Diane Fisher, Charles Halton, George Breakstone, Charles Trowbridge, George Meeker, Leona Roberts, Charles Tannen, Nella Walker and Esther Dale. Directed by Sidney Lanfield. Previewed Tuesday, January 9. At Loew's Palace Theater.

"Swanee River," the Twentieth Century-Fox Technicolor picturization of "the story of Stephen C. Foster," yesterday revealed for the first time on a local screen at Loew's Palace Theater, very evidently was devised to enchant the lovers of Foster's imperishable American folk songs, rather than those primarily concerned with a factual recital of the colorful events that punctuated his strangely contradictory life.

John Taintor Foote and Philip Dunne have literally "fabricated" a story that affords unusually effective circumstances with which to introduce the most enduring and the most popular of the Foster compositions. In doing so, however, they have cast chronology and reasonably authenticated fact to the four winds. They have done this in a manner that is completely respectful to the memory of one of America's great musical figures. Foster has been made one of the most sympathetic characters ever brought to the screen—a victim of a single weakness that brought about his private and professional undoing.

Particularly effective are the developments that are fictitiously made the sources of inspiration that resulted in the composition of three of the most beautiful and most famous of the Foster songs—"My Old Kentucky Home," "Old Black Joe" and the song of the South from which the picture derives its name.

Action Is Repetitive

There is no great amount of dramatic action in "Swanee River," although there is in it a vast amount of beauty for both eye and ear. Executed in the gentler tints of Technicolor, the introductory scenes on the South, where Foster received his first impteus to put the plaintive chants of the Negroes on paper, are panoramas of great loveliness. The later coalition of forces between Foster and E. P. Christy, foremost of the early minstrel men, is perhaps the soundest note in the play. It also is the genesis of the picture's most repetitive action.

Don Ameche offers a studiously efficient character study of Stephen Collins Foster and shares the vocal honors of the play's development with Al Jolson, handsomely cast in the role of Christy—a part that enables him to return to the burnt-cork type of characterization that first brought him to fame as "the world's greatest entertainer." Andrea Leeds, as Jane McDowell, who becomes Mrs. Stephen C. Foster in a manner that seems to be wholly contrary to fact, plays with utmost placidity, but also with utmost pictorial effect. George Reed, a Negro cast in the Clarence Muse mould, is an admirable Old Joe and Felix Bressart—last seen as one of the Soviet commissars with Garbo in "Ninotchka"—is a believable Henry Kleber, Pittsburgh music instructor, who also was an authentic influence in Foster's life. The Hall Johnson Choir lends rich vocal background to many—but not enough—of the Southern episodes of the story.

Robert Benchley's "That Inferior Feeling," an M-G-M Miniature, "Miracle at Lourdes," and "News of the Day" complete the bill.

Debs said the ninth beatitude is: 'Blessed are they who expecteth nothing—for they shall not be disappointed.'"

ARTHUR TREACHER: Josh Logan, who will direct Dwight Wiman's "Nice Goin'"—a show about the Butlers' Ball—decided to attend last night's Butler Ball, for research experience. He refused to shave his mustache, and so he couldn't pose as a butler. He attended—as Wiman's chauffeur . . . Christopher Morley: They'll be repercussions when your book, "Kitty Foyle," is published in London next month. There's a real Kitty Foyle—Catherine Foyle, who manages the famous London bookshop, Foyle's . . . Senator Taft: At the Jackson Day Dinner Jim Farley surveyed the roomful of candidates and said: "Everybody in longtails is a statesman."

ROARK BRADFORD: At last night's reception after the premiere of yours and Jacques Wolfe's show, "John Henry," Paul Robeson was approached by Frank Herring, the artist, who asked him to pose for a portrait . . . "I'm painting your entire race," Herring stated, extending his hand and then raising it, "from the lower crust up . . . and up . . . until now I want to paint you" . . . "Sir," replied Robeson, "you must excuse me—but I recognize no such distinction."

IL DUCE: Mara Manet, who will begin her American career at Palm Beach's El Patio, is the daughter of your former "Il Popolo" colleague, Mario Mariani—who later fought for the loyalists in Spain . . . Will Hays: Read "The Censor Marches On," by Morris L. Ernst and Alexander Lindey. It's a brilliant and fascinating thesis which sheds light on a dark problem of our times.

HARRY HOPKINS: Because of the war, the American Express Co. has had to cut $1,700,000 from its overhead. That's why Robert L. Clarkson, head of the company, has just become affiliated with an export and import company to place the American Express offices abroad at the disposal of this firm, hoping thereby to compensate for the war losses.

EMILY POST: Last night the Archduke Franz Joseph was asked by an American friend: "How should I address you—as 'Mr. Archduke' or 'Mr. Hapsburg'?" . . . "It makes no difference to me," he explained, "only every Archduke is a Hapsburg, while every Hapsburg is not an Archduke. Call me anything except a Grand Duke, because Grand Dukes are Russians famed for their money—and whips."

Western Pictures Now Going 'Sissy'

In "Santa Fe Marshal," William Boyd, in his star role of Hopalong Cassidy, wore dude clothes, and in "Showdown," Morris Ankrum, the villain, sported a monocle.

But both these were topped when the heroine rescued the hero in "The Light of Western Stars," the Zane Grey story being produced by Harry Sherman.

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Jan. 12.

Best part of a columnist's day is the letters she gets. But the type of letter that stops me cold is one postmarked "Jail." One came in this morning — from a chap who signs himself "Hopeful Tom" of Tank so-and-so, Los Angeles County jail. First Tom has some nice things to say about Jailer Clem Peeples — then he goes on with what's wrong with the world. "I'll be glad when they get George Raft away from jails," he says, "he's spent more time in them than I have and he must be tired of them. I read "Gone With the Wind," (which gives you an idea how long Tom's been incarcerated), and I sure want to see the picture. Think it's wonderful the way Cary Grant, David Niven and those other boys have offered their services to England. Why not send little Sonya Henie over to lead the Finnish army on skates against Russia? Russia used women in its army, didn't it? I served in the 124th Field Artillery in the last war and hope our boys don't get into the second. I drove horses pulling old 75's and I don't mind telling you I wasn't the only soldier who cried when he said good-by to his old team. Why can't they shut war news down? Crime doesn't pay, even in its mildest forms. Well, I'm due out in April, 1940. I imagine things are better out there—with Garbo smiling and Seabiscuit trying for a comeback. I'm sure he'll make it too, his spirit has never been broken, and as a lover of horses I'm taking my cue from that."

HOPPER

How times change. Last year Shirley Temple started the March of Dimes for the President's Infantile Paralysis Fund, this year it was Judy Garland and Mickey Rooney who made the short which will be seen in all the theaters. Slowly but surely they're working up to a grown-up star.

Miriam Hopkins was sitting for some pictures at Warners when one of the overhead lights dropped. "I'd understand that," she smiled, "if I'd been here longer"—which makes me think she's heard some of those things said about her temperament, but I like Miriam's fighting spirit—she let's no one put anything over on her—hear she may marry Bennett Cerf . . . Other studios, restaurants, homes and clubs ought to copy the sign displayed at Paramount: "No War Talk—Please!"

Patricia Ellis went to the annual bird show at the Wilshire Ebell Club, wearing a hat with a funny feather on it. A giant cockatoo, probably mistaking it for a long lost brother, jumped from his perch and almost tore up the hat before it could be rescued. "And for everybody else Cockatoos sing!" laughed Pat.

Speaking of birds, they imported two from the Flamingo family from South Africa for "Swiss Family Robinson" and nicknamed them "Hitler" and "Stalin" because they had a nasty habit—when anybody passed they'd reach and snip off a portion of that person's clothing which they couldn't snip off if the victim were seated!

If mamma leaves them alone that romance between Bob Stack and Cobina Wright, jr., could become serious in 24 hours. Poor Cobina—both she and Joan Fontaine wore swollen faces all during the holiday season. Wisdom tooth trouble.

"Hardy and Son" One of Series' Best; Beverly Roberts Sings

By Richard L. Coe.

"JUDGE HARDY AND SON." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of an original screen play by Carey Wilson, based upon the characters created by Aurania Rouverol, with Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden, Ann Rutherford, Sarah Haden, June Preisser, Maria Ouspenskaya, Henry Hull, Martha O'Driscoll, Leona Maricle, Margaret Early, George Breakston, Egon Brecher, Edna Holland, Marie Blake and Joe Yule. Directed by George B. Seitz. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Capitol Theater.

Mickey Rooney, High Potentate of the American Box Office, was the magnet for a packed Capitol Theater yesterday, and in "Judge Hardy and Son" the young player did not disappoint his audience. Eighth in the series, this Hardy family comedy is also one of the most enjoyable.

While it contains all of the ingredients of comedy and family life which were the body of the preceding films, "Judge Hardy and Son" avoids the monotony of repetition by focusing upon three separate facets: Andy's financial and feminine troubles, Mrs. Hardy's critical illness and the unhappy difficulties of two unhonored parents.

It has become a habit, which must tire the reader, to point out, again and again, the understanding playing of the youthful Rooney. His precise timing of a scene that would be "cold turkey" in the hands of another player makes such episodes unbelievably fresh. Rooney's assurance in either the comic or the serious is given ample rein in the knowingly constructed screen play.

A Telling Scene

Toward the latter part of the picture there occurs quite the finest "man-to-man talk" since that memorable one in "Love Finds Andy Hardy." Between the ever-reliable Lewis Stone and his "son" ensues a likable dialogue on the annoyances of money, of women, of oneself and of the joys of a happy family life.

Of course, the rest of the Hardys have their accustomed roles. Cecilia Parker and Fay Holden are more in evidence than usual and make the most of that circumstance. Ann Rutherford's Polly Benedict is excellent and the addition of June Preisser, as the giggly Euphrasia, and Margaret Early, as a sort of high school Cindy Lou Bethany is, we trust, a welcome permanency. Maria Ouspenskaya's brief scene as a mother whose daughter is ashamed of her is characteristically well done.

Well-Rounded Bill

The Capitol stage presents a variety bill that is as near to true vaudeville as anything F street has offered in some time.

With their jittery hats and slow motion juggling, the Five Elgins return to open the bill. Fredericks and Lane, who met when both were appearing on the Capitol stage, contribute some novel dances. A Central High School girl, Miss Lane received a pleasant welcome from her home town.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Chicago, Jan. 12 (INS).—After weeks of silence, the official notice comes from London that David Niven has joined the English army and is now awaiting orders that will take him to his regiment, the Highland light infantry, in France. This news should quiet the skeptics who were sure that David would be back in Hollywood before you could say "blitzkrieg" to make another picture for Sam Goldwyn. In fact, his own studio had cause to believe the English actor would be back following the official army announcement that England did not plan to recruit actors for immediate service.

LOUELLA PARSONS

This means that "The Return of Raffles," a sequel to the current thriller, which was completely prepared and ready to shoot, will be shelved. Even those closest to David, I believe, reckoned without his determination to serve his country. He tried to join the British expeditionary forces directly in France—but when he was rebuffed he went on to London and wouldn't take "no" for an answer until they accepted him in his old regiment.

Virginia and Darryl Zanuck entrain for New York Tuesday, taking with them prints of "The Blue Bird," the Shirley Temple picture, and one of "Grapes of Wrath." Darryl will be present when Maeterlinck's charming fantasy opens at the Hollywood Theater in New York, January 19, and also when "Grapes of Wrath" makes its initial bow to Broadway at the Rivoli on the 23d. These are by far the most important pictures Zanuck made last year and he wants personally to see they get off to a good start. "Blue Bird" is expected to do big things for the little Temple girl and, as for "Grapes of Wrath," it has been the most widely discussed story of the era, with the exception, of course, of "Gone With the Wind."

Snapshots of Hollywood and Chicago collected at random: Gene Raymond, bothered by his throat for a long time, checks into the Cedars of Lebanon today for a tonsillectomy; Lupe Velez's new interest is Brandy Brent; everybody at the Bali thought Pat Dane, Rudy Vallee's girl friend, looked just like Hedy Lamarr until Hedy herself walked in with Gene Markey; Ernest Byfield and Frank Bering were hosts at one of the most elaborate dinners given us since we started our tour, in the pump room at the Ambassador. The chef outdid himself and I am taking home some of his recipes to spring on my friends. Mrs. Bering, who is a former actress, is very pretty and he assisted her husband and Mr. Byfield in entertaining us. We all went back to the theater too well fed for comfort.

Well, tomorrow ends our tour and I am leaving in a few hours for home, carrying with me grateful remembrances of Chicago. What a heart-warming reception we have had. The Dixon papers have gone to town for Ronald Reagan, as well as for yours truly, who graduated from the Dixon High School (in different years, of course). School friends by the dozens came to call. Lolita and Ardo, the wonderful dancers we saw in San Francisco, have been signed for Earl Carroll's Hollywood revue and they were nice enough to wire me that a mention in this column got them the opportunity.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Stage Story on Screen at Met

"THE NIGHT OF NIGHTS." Paramount picturization of an original screen play by Donald Ogden Stewart, featuring Pat O'Brien, Olympe Bradna and Roland Young, with Reginald Gardiner, George E. Stone, Murray Alper, Frank Sully, Russ Powell, Wyndham Standing, Pat O'Malley, Frank Shannon, Theodor Von Eltz, Aileen Pringle and numerous others. Directed by Lewis Milestone. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

Time is marching on the double-quick! For Pat O'Brien, long the love-interest boy, grows both a daughter and a mustache in "The Night of Nights." And a great, big beautiful daughter, too—meaning Olympe Bradna. Pat may have had a couple of movie children before, but they were the tiny, oothless kind. The funny part is that Pat looks younger than he did a couple of seasons ago, seems a bit juvenile to be any kind of a daddy.

Away back in 1919, it appears that Pat and his alcoholic pal, Roland Young, completely wrecked an opening night on Broadway by getting so plastered that they toppled over the footlights. The leading lady, who was Mrs. Pat and "expecting" in the bargain, was so piqued that she walked right out of her hotel door into nothingness—never could be found . . . Years pass. And Pat, a broken man, sits around the Lambs' Club riffling through magazines. Comes a letter bearing the news that he has a 19-year-old daughter, who's been reared in a Canadian convent, and is now on her way to see daddy.

From here it's just a hop, skip and a jump to Pat and his Broadway friends reviving the play that failed so disgracefully 20 years before, with daughter Olympe in her mother's role. The show, handicapped and sneered at, clicks over to a big success.

There are tears and giggles, binges and heartaches in "Night of Nights." Little Olympe sings one song, a little French one, very prettily. Pat O'Brien dominates the picture in his usual off-hand but expert manner. Among the fine troupers are Roland Young, Reginald Gardiner, George E. Stone and Mary Gordon. Playing a ritzy saleslady is Aileen Pringle whose name was up in lights not so long ago.

Leon Errol, most dependably funny man in Hollywood, stars in a short called "Truth Aches." There's a Crawford organ specialty introducing 13-year-old Jessie, daughter of the Crawfords and spittin' image of Father Jesse. The news reel skips the war this time and bears down on spring hats and ice skating.

MARY HARRIS.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Professing Complete Indifference to Men, Woman Flouts Theory That She Is Lonely or Peculiar

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Do you believe it could ever be considered natural for a woman to be wholly unattracted to the opposite sex? And if not, could such a nature have been caused by early childhood resentments inspired by brothers, a ne'er-do-well father or other male relatives?

I am past 30 and such is my plight, if it can be called a plight. My father drank and was mean to my mother. My two brothers were always good-for-nothing and cruel to us girls, even in grammar school, and apparently sought to pattern their lives after father's.

My favorite aunt had two worthless husbands and in my mature years I have seen enough bad marriages to discourage even the most ardent advocate of the so-called blessed estate. But further than that, I've never been really interested in men. I have always preferred my own society or the company of other women. And don't think that a false statement; it is the literal truth.

Sometimes I am secretly amused to see what women will tolerate from men, just for the sake of having a husband or some man's companionship. Other times, I have been disgusted by the "stag" conversations I have overheard among men in various offices where I have worked—when they start panning their wives or girl friends or making them the butt of their perverted sense of humor and jokes.

And when some woman who doesn't know me well seems concerned over my "loneliness," I could laugh in her face. It is so funny. Why, I make a salary beside which the average man's is anemic. On top of that, I have a very comfortable home, sufficient money and leisure to enjoy life as I like it, and I'm not supporting or contributing to the support of a husband, father, brothers, uncles, cousins or any other male parasite such as I've known quite a number of other women to have on their "dependent" list.

Yet if I were to dare express my opinions freely in public, people would look at me as if to say: "Poor thing. Someone really ought to persuade her to see a psychiatrist." Maybe the world's right and I'm wrong, but isn't it just barely possible that not every woman in the world pines for lack of a husband? Isn't it also true that a woman is better off without any husband, than with a bad husband?

Oh, yes, one last thing, before somebody thinks of it and lets me have it. I've had three proposals of marriage. What do you say, Miss Haworth? Be honest, now. L. A. P.

Case of Woman Who Distrusts Men

DEAR L. A. P.: According to Webster's dictionary, the word "natural" means, among other things, "that which is truly representative or expressive of one's sentiment." No one would deny, I think, that there is—and always has been—a small percentage of women who are sincerely disinterested in men. It is "natural" for such women serenely to pursue a life of single blessedness. (And, by the way, it is the single life which is commonly referred to as "blessed." Your own ironic allusion to marriage as the "so-called blessed estate," is my first introduction to the term used in that connection.)

Nearly everyone with a broad social acquaintanceship has known some few women distinctly "of the world," (not to mention women leading cloistered lives as members of religious orders), who are emotionally as unresponsive to men as other individuals (of either sex) are unresponsive to classical music, let us say; or children or dogs, or the philosophy of Plato, or Chinese art, etc., etc.

However, the woman who is "naturally" psychologically independent of men is subtly different from you—in that she is, for the most part, happily unaware both of the male sex (collectively and individually) and of her dissimilarity to the average woman who needs must love and be loved by some man, if her life is to be complete. Your own attitude, both toward men and toward your vaunted self sufficiency, is much more self conscious, you must admit. It amounts to a challenge and a taunt. It is expressive of contempt and fear; of defiant distrust rather than of bonafide detachment.

It seems clear from your story that "early childhood resentments" incurred by "ne'er-do-well" male relatives are responsible for your mocking disdain of the sex—a disdain which carries over to include the artless average woman who candidly mollycoddles "her man." Your well paid professional success—beside which the average man's seems "anemic," to use your words—may have been subconsciously intended as a camouflaged insult to the species; or, on the other hand, it may be a form of compensation for the bulwark of masculine companionship which your essential nature craves, but which your conscious mind prevents you from seeking or accepting. In any event, your "edgy" awareness of the fact that you are "doing all right" without a man suggests, to me, that it has been and continues to be a somewhat laborious performance.

Now, as to whether "a woman is better off without any husband than with a bad husband,"—that, in my opinion, is an academic question to which the individual woman alone can supply the fitting answer. There are persons—men as well as women—who can turn even unfortunate experiences to profit, in terms of strengthened character and increased understanding of life and humanity. And there are women who would feel that half a loaf—or even crumbs—of marital experience are better than no such experience at all. M. H.

Paint Pictures On Glass

YES, YOU can paint this lovely picture, "Sunflowers and Zinnias!" And think how it will look in rich flower colors—and in its actual size, 9 by 12 inches.

The painting you do on glass this simple way. Place under the glass your design already printed on paper. Follow the design exactly as you paint. And by this same method you can paint other beautiful subjects too—skyscrapers, treasure ships, an old windmill.

Your paints? Tubes of blue, red and yellow oils which you can get from the 5-and-10. Mix them according to your color chart to make any color. Red, blue and yellow, for instance, make brown. For darker tones mix in black household enamel, for lighter tones, white household enamel.

The printed design for "Sunflowers and Zinnias" is given in our set, "Six Pictures to Paint On Glass." Includes "Skyscrapers," "Old Windmill," "Treasure Ships at Sea," "Poplars by the River," "Fishing Village"—all 9 by 12 inches in size. Chart tells how to mix and apply color, what colors to use for each design.

Send 15c in coins for our set of "Six Pictures to Paint On Glass" to The Washington Post Institute, 109 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write lainly your name and address.

Beachcomber Fashions of Celanese

Celanese Supplanting Pure Silk Generally, Except in Hosiery

Has Sleek Smoothness That Repels Dirt And Cuts Cleaning Bills; Especially Good For Swim Suits; Also for Wash Dresses

By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor

DID YOU KNOW that Celanese silks are the highest quality fabrics in that vastly growing family of rayon materials? That pure raw silk is scarcely used now, except for hosiery? That because of a sleek smoothness of the yarn used in Celanese garments—dust, soot and grit are repelled more easily, thus eliminating over-persistent cleaning bills? And that because of this same eel-like smoothness, Celanese swim suits are worn almost exclusively by Eleanor Holm and other aquatic stars to aid in cutting down the resistance—and seconds—in water competition?

Marshall Adams

These are but a few of the merits of Celanese, according to laboratory and fashion experts from the vast Celanese Corporation of America, who arrived en masse this week to propagate the virtues of this yarn. Their efforts culminated last night in the presentation of the most gala style show of the new season. More than 50 costumes, in swim, resort and formal versions, were shown to the enlightenment of 500 women who swarmed the Blue Room of the Shoreham Hotel during the dinner hour.

Can't Bleach or "Bleed"

Enlightening, indeed, proved the Celanese review since many of the spectators probably arrived with the opinion that Celanese was just another "cheap" synthetic yarn that would singe and frizzle if it looked at a match, or wither at the sight of alcoholic beverages, faults formerly blamed erroneously to this test-tube yarn. Gleaned from the showing were the following proved benefits of Celanese:

That it's noninflammable, nonshrinkable and often tubable when specified.

That it won't bleach in the sun and that black and white prints cannot "bleed" or run, due to pure nonsilkworm colors being used in dying. The fact that Celanese is guaranteed bleach-proof should be a boon to the many Washingtonians who will live in nothing else but whites come hot weather. Celanese is bleached at no time, and therefore cannot "turn" yellow as does pure silk.

Texture Variations

An interesting feature of Celanese which we never knew till now is that "Celbrook," one of the crisp cruise fabrics made by the Celanese factories, is really the original "sharkskin" material. Although sharkskin has become a yardage term known to everyone who wears hot-weather clothes, men and women alike, it was originally called Celbrook by Celanese when it was first introduced to California playgrounds six years ago—the movie people giving its gleaming surface the more descriptive name of sharkskin.

A number of intriguing surface finishes in the Celanese yarn family were featured on the Shoreham's runway. One of them was "Jersanese," one of the most seductive jerseys ever to be made into dinner or spectator sports dresses. Not only is this jersey closely knit, which means it is stretch-proof, but it is run-proof, just like your hose is supposed to be. There also is a "Wingstrut," which is a weave made of thick-and-thin yarns to create a pleasing cross-checkered texture to the material.

Stripes Feature Resort Clothes

They're to be found in everything, from sunbonnets and parasols to play shoes. Most of them are discreet two-toned effects—navy blues, reds, greens, yellows or browns combined with white—but a few gay rainbow striped cottons add colorful variety.

Vanity Main Bar to Feminine Success

Causes Failures in Love and Business, Says, Dr. Nutall

WOMEN'S failures in love and career are due to personality deficiencies, chief of which are exaggerated vanity, materialistic viewpoint, failure to lend a sympathetic ear to men's struggles and disappointments, according to Dr. Maude S. Nutall, personality consultant.

"If the average woman would listen more understandingly to her mate," said Dr. Nutall, "she would find a more devoted and contented companion. Too often instead of listening appreciatively, the wife or sweetheart breaks forth with a flow of abuse or a list of her own woes. This attitude thwarts and discourages any man."

To keep the undivided interest of a husband or lover, a woman should refrain from all criticism and never under any circumstances deflate his ego, she said, explaining that the worthwhile man feels that he is doing everything within his power for her comfort and happiness. Therefore, he resents criticism. Constant nagging, she declared, turns men into neurotics, and contrary to popular belief, more men are neurotic than women. This she attributes to the woman's incessant financial demands.

Vanity Blamed

"Desire for luxuries—which the average woman insist upon," she said, "drive the man so hard to meet her requirements, that he becomes harassed and nervous.

This friendly, unassuming woman, who is scholarly without being pedantic bases her opinions on countless interviews with men and women in all walks of life, who seek her advice on personality problems.

Vanity is to blame for nearly all of women's troubles—or rather "conflicts," maintains Dr. Nutall, who was a student of the late Dr. Alfred Adler, famous Viennese psychologist and founder of the school of "Individual Psychology."

For instance, she said, in love and marriage woman's first concern is hurt vanity; if she loses her husband to another woman she resents the fact that he has found someone more interesting, rather than regretting the loss of his love.

While sex should not be discounted, Dr. Nutall believes that it is overly exaggerated and that it is by no means the most important factor in a happy marriage. And though she thinks that a woman should make the most of her natural beauty by being as physically attractive as possible, it should be kept in mind that real men—intelligent thinking men with the proper sense of values in life look for something in woman beyond mere physical appeal.

Biblical Theory Favored

For a successful marriage, Dr. Nutall advocates the Biblical theory of gaining one's life while losing it. In explanation of this theory, she says: "A woman should lose her life in her husband's to the extent of keeping pace with him mentally, so she can manifest interest in his work and activities insofar as he desires interest—that is to discuss and forget at his will. She must contribute and cooperate all she can if she expects a full measure of devotion in return, for a real marriage is a matter of going together along a friendly road."

Self centeredness or lack of interest in other people is another personality deficiency that spoils a woman's chance of happiness, according to Dr. Nutall who says, "A vital, kindly interest in other people is necessary for a warm, colorful, winning personality. Poise, mental alertness, sincerity, femininity, naturalness, sincerity and the recognition of the fact that she is a woman first, last and always are other attributes that make up a composite womanly personality."

Here are the average woman's predominant personality deficiencies as seen by this woman whose one purpose in life is to help other people: Exaggerated vanity; demanding, exacting qualities; nagging; emotional immaturity (reacting childishly to situations instead as an adult); jealousy; domination (this loses more sweethearts and husbands than any other one quality).

"No personality deficiency is so great that it may not be overcome," said Dr. Nutall, "if the woman is willing to make a conscientious effort to improve." So great is her belief that most problems can be solved by a sympathetic, intelligent and objective viewpoint of a person who is sincerely interested in other people, that she has set up an office in Washington for that purpose. As the "Friendly Conselor," she proposes to help (without remuneration) men and women solve their personality problems. Also she will discuss personality traits in a series of broadcasts over a local radio station.

The establishment of the "Friendly Counselor" bureau is the outgrowth of a long-cherished dream. Serving as her assistant is Cyril P. Dickson, local attorney, who sets aside part of his working time to give counsel to those perplexed with everyday problems. His role is not that of a lawyer or legal adviser but that of a quiet, keen analysist, dynamically interested in the welfare of the average man and woman who needs a sympathetic ear.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Jan. 12.

AFTER A close look at what is loosely, and even comically called "New York Society," for the past three months of the current season, I am sure that the current situation in our world metropolis calls loudly for the services of a modern Historian Gibbon. For our little Rome, I feel, is about to fall.

Alice Hughes

Everything says so. The whole emphasis, this winter, is on the big and costly. Spending proceeds as though we were again in the fateful winter of 1928-29. New Year's Eve, in the cafes and deadfalls, was an unparalleled debauch. One host eloquently said that he had never seen his customers in such "a winey mood"—a perfect description. Unless the cork popped, during the holidays, the bottled goods were cheap, uninteresting and slightly vulgar.

At such colossal events as horse show openings or a benefit prize fight, we no longer go to peer amiably at the faces in the boxes, but to count the chinchilla wraps. If Mrs. Watriss, Brenda Frazier's mother, wears hers, the breathtaking news is proudly recorded in all the papers. By March, these expensive pelts may be so common that their owners may toss them into the trash can, and go in for something really rare, like the fur of the three-toed sloth.

The same goes for jewels. Unless a diamond ring or a wrist bangle of ruby weighs 2 pounds, it doesn't count in the score. Miss Peggy Hopkins Joyce, local bachelor girl, and Miss Mabel Boll, who own two of our richest resident collections, must have felt a little badly when a lady appeared at a night club wearing the huge "Jonker" diamond, jocosely priced at $1,000,000. She was guarded by three heavy dicks wearing derby hats. New York says spend it if you've got it—if not, borrow it. The town is racing, drunkenly, to its appointed end, so rush over fast if you want to get a last dizzy look at the New World's craziest spot. By 1941 there may be only a flying flock of buzzards.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The successor to Hedy Lamarr has been chosen. I don't mean by us movie fans, of course, but by Mr. Fritz Mandl, who used to be married to Hollywood's static star when he was an Austrian munitions baron. He has been introducing wife No. 2 around town lately—a blonde from the Austrian stage of the name of Herta Schneider. Well, Hedy was midnight dark, and Fritz is probably smart to switch colors, if only for variety.

If you want to go out to our wonderful new airport on Long Island and see the big silver ships come in, it will cost you money. So huge have the visiting crowds been, hampering the field's activities, that it now costs 10 cents to stand on the observation deck and ogle the planes, and a quarter to park.

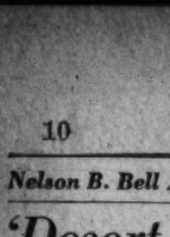
"BROTHER RAT AND A BABY." Warner Brothers' picturization of an original screen play by John Monks, jr., and Fred F. Finklehoffe, featuring Priscilla Lane, Wayne Morris, Jane Bryan, Eddie Albert, Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan, with Baby Peter B. Good, Arthur Treacher, Moroni Olsen, Jessie Busley, Larry Williams, Berton Churchill, Nana Bryant, Paul Harvey, Mayo Methot and Ed Gargan. Directed by Ray Enright. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

There is a remarkably well-balanced bill at the Warner Brothers' Earl Theater this week. The running time of the program is almost evenly divided between Sigmund Romberg's operetta of "The Desert Song," in condensed, but not butchered, form, and "Brother Rat and a Baby," a cyclonic screen farce by John Monks, jr., and Fred F. Finklehoffe, authors of the original "Brother Rat," that achieved such eminent success both as a stage comedy and later in film form.



BELL

Production Manager Harry Anger has worked something of a minor miracle in the staging of the tabloid version of "The Desert Song." Enough of the book has been retained to present a coherent story and all of the many melody gems of the original score remain practically intact. Furthermore, the piece is exceptionally well sung and acted with competence, although the abridgement of the book has reduced the necessity for sustained characterization or the creation of any mood beyond the alternate romantic and comic movements of the story of northern Africa.

Some Excellent Voices

The roles of the "Red Shadow" and Margot bring the fine voices of Ray Heatherton and Ethel Taylor, tenor and soprano, respectively, to the Earle stage this week and both are decidedly worth hearing. The comedy parts of Bennie and Susan are done more than ordinary justice by Fred Lightner, a veteran at this sort of thing, and June Havoc, a slightly grotesque composite of Fannie Brice and Charlotte Greenwood. Jack Kitly, the Capt. Fontaine; Byrd Byron, Sid-El-Kar; John Clark, Gen. Birabeau; Helen Gray, as Asuri, and The Robbins, as desert tumblers, contribute notably to a colorfully staged series of scenes, to which The Virginians, in the singing ensembles, and the Roxyettes, in flashy drilling and dancing routines, lend life and action.

"Brother Rat and a Baby" is a rollicking item, contrived to make fun rather than sense. The boys and girls first encountered at V. M. I., are a year or two older now and trying to get along in the world—all trying, that is, except that prodigious bungler, Billy Randolph, who manufacturers more trouble to the minute than the dictators of Europe. Money is the chief source of difficulty in the present panic. The devices by which it is produced are weird and wonderful to behold.

Western Pictures Now Going 'Sissy'

In "Santa Fe Marshal," William Boyd, in his star role of Hopalong Cassidy, wore dude clothes, and in "Showdown," Morris Ankrum, the villain, sported a monocle.

But both these were topped when the heroine rescued the hero in "The Light of Western Stars," the Zane Grey story being produced by Harry Sherman.

"SWANEE RIVER." Twentieth Century-Fox Technicolor picturization of a screen play by John Taintor Foote and Philip Dunne, featuring Don Ameche, Andrea Leeds and Al Jolson, with Felix Bressart, Russell Hicks, George Reed, Richard Clarke, Diane Fisher, Charles Halton, George Breakstone, Charles Trowbridge, George Meeker, Leona Roberts, Charles Tannen, Nella Walker and Esther Dale. Directed by Sidney Lanfield. Previewed Tuesday, January 9. At Loew's Palace Theater.

"Swanee River," the Twentieth Century-Fox Technicolor picturization of "the story of Stephen C. Foster," yesterday revealed for the first time on a local screen at Loew's Palace Theater, very evidently was devised to enchant the lovers of Foster's imperishable American folk songs, rather than those primarily concerned with a factual recital of the colorful events that punctuated his strangely contradictory life.

John Taintor Foote and Philip Dunne have literally "fabricated" a story that affords unusually effective circumstances with which to introduce the most enduring and the most popular of the Foster compositions. In doing so, however, they have cast chronology and reasonably authenticated fact to the four winds. They have done this in a manner that is completely respectful to the memory of one of America's great musical figures. Foster has been made one of the most sympathetic characters ever brought to the screen—a victim of a single weakness that brought about his private and professional undoing.

Particularly effective are the developments that are fictitiously made the sources of inspiration that resulted in the composition of three of the most beautiful and most famous of the Foster songs—"My Old Kentucky Home," "Old Black Joe" and the song of the South from which the picture derives its name.

Action Is Repetitive

There is no great amount of dramatic action in "Swanee River," although there is in it a vast amount of beauty for both eye and ear. Executed in the gentler tints of Technicolor, the introductory scenes on the South, where Foster received his first impteus to put the plaintive chants of the Negroes on paper, are panoramas of great loveliness. The later coalition of forces between Foster and E. P. Christy, foremost of the early minstrel men, is perhaps the soundest note in the play. It also is the genesis of the picture's most repetitive action.

Don Ameche offers a studiously efficient character study of Stephen Collins Foster and shares the vocal honors of the play's development with Al Jolson, handsomely cast in the role of Christy—a part that enables him to return to the burnt-cork type of characterization that first brought him to fame as "the world's greatest entertainer." Andrea Leeds, as Jane McDowell, who becomes Mrs. Stephen C. Foster in a manner that seems to be wholly contrary to fact, plays with utmost placidity, but also with utmost pictorial effect. George Reed, a Negro cast in the Clarence Muse mould, is an admirable Old Joe and Felix Bressart—last seen as one of the Soviet commissars with Garbo in "Ninotchka"—is a believable Henry Kleber, Pittsburgh music instructor, who also was an authentic influence in Foster's life. The Hall Johnson Choir lends rich vocal background to many—but not enough—of the Southern episodes of the story.

Robert Benchley's "That Inferior Feeling," an M-G-M Miniature, "Miracle at Lourdes," and "News of the Day" complete the bill.

ROARK BRADFORD: At last night's reception after the premiere of yours and Jacques Wolfe's show, "John Henry," Paul Robeson was approached by Frank Herring, the artist, who asked him to pose for a portrait . . . "I'm painting your entire race," Herring stated, extending his hand and then raising it, "from the lower crust up . . . and up . . . until now I want to paint you" . . . "Sir," replied Robeson, "you must excuse me—but I recognize no such distinction."

IL DUCE: Mara Manet, who will begin her American career at Palm Beach's El Patio, is the daughter of your former "Il Popolo" colleague, Mario Mariani—who later fought for the loyalists in Spain . . . Will Hays: Read "The Censor Marches On," by Morris L. Ernst and Alexander Lindey: It's a brilliant and fascinating thesis which sheds light on a dark problem of our times.

HARRY HOPKINS: Because of the war, the American Express Co. has had to cut $1,700,000 from its overhead. That's why Robert L. Clarkson, head of the company, has just become affiliated with an export and import company to place the American Express offices abroad at the disposal of this firm, hoping thereby to compensate for the war losses.

EMILY POST: Last night the Archduke Franz Joseph was asked by an American friend: "How should I address you—as 'Mr. Archduke' or 'Mr. Hapsburg'?" . . . "It makes no difference to me," he explained, "only every Archduke is a Hapsburg, while every Hapsburg is not an Archduke. Call me anything except a Grand Duke, because Grand Dukes are Russians famed for their money—and whips."

Box Office Ace, MickeyRooney, Packs Capitol

By Richard L. Coe.

"JUDGE HARDY AND SON." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of an original screen play by Carey Wilson, based upon the characters created by Aurania Rouverol, with Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden, Ann Rutherford, Sarah Haden, June Preisser, Maria Ouspenskaya, Henry Hull, Martha O'Driscoll, Leona Maricle, Margaret Early, George Breakston, Eon Brecher, Edna Holland, Marie Blake and Jos Yule. Directed by George B. Seitz. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Capitol Theater.

Mickey Rooney, High Potentate of the American Box Office, was the magnet for a packed Capitol Theater yesterday, and in "Judge Hardy and Son" the young player did not disappoint his audience. Eighth in the series, this Hardy family comedy is also one of the most enjoyable.

While it contains all of the ingredients of comedy and family life which were the body of the preceding films, "Judge Hardy and Son" avoids the monotony of repetition by focusing upon three separate facets: Andy's financial and feminine troubles, Mrs. Hardy's critical illness and the unhappy difficulties of two unhonored parents.

It has become a habit, which must tire the reader, to point out, again and again, the understanding playing of the youthful Rooney. His precise timing of a scene that would be "cold turkey" in the hands of another player makes such episodes unbelievably fresh. Rooney's assurance in either the comic or the serious is given ample rein in the knowingly constructed screen play.

A Telling Scene

Toward the latter part of the picture there occurs quite the finest "man-to-man talk" since that memorable one in "Love Finds Andy Hardy." Between the ever-reliable Lewis Stone and his "son" ensues a likable dialogue on the annoyances of money, of women, of oneself and of the joys of a happy family life.

Of course, the rest of the Hardys have their accustomed roles. Cecilia Parker and Fay Holden are more in evidence than usual and make the most of that circumstance. Ann Rutherford's Polly Benedict is excellent and the addition of June Preisser, as the giggly Euphrasia, and Margaret Early, as a sort of high school Cindy Lou Bethany is, we trust, a welcome permanency. Maria Ouspenskaya's brief scene as a mother whose daughter is ashamed of her is characteristically well done.

Well-Rounded Bill

The Capitol stage presents a variety bill that is as near to true vaudeville as anything F street has offered in some time.

With their jittery hats and slow motion juggling, the Five Elgins return to open the bill. Fredericks and Lane, who met when both were appearing on the Capitol stage, contribute some novel dances. A Central High School girl, Miss Lane received a pleasant welcome from her home town.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Chicago, Jan. 12 (INS).—After weeks of silence, the official notice comes from London that David Niven has joined the English army and is now awaiting orders that will take him to his regiment, the Highland light infantry, in France. This news should quiet the skeptics who were sure that David would be back in Hollywood before you could say "blitzkrieg" to make another picture Sam Goldwyn. In fact, his own studio had cause to believe the English actor would be back following the official army announcement that England did not plan to recruit actors for immediate service.

LOUELLA PARSONS

This means that "The Return of Raffles," a sequel to the current thriller, which was completely prepared and ready to shoot, will be shelved. Even those closest to David, I believe, reckoned without his determination to serve his country. He tried to join the British expeditionary forces directly in France—but when he was rebuffed he went on to London and wouldn't take "no" for an answer until they accepted him in his old regiment.

Virginia and Darryl Zanuck entrain for New York Tuesday, taking with them prints of "The Blue Bird," the Shirley Temple picture, and one of "Grapes of Wrath." Darryl will be present when Maeterlinck's charming fantasy opens at the Hollywood Theater in New York, January 19, and also when "Grapes of Wrath" makes its initial bow to Broadway at the Rivoli on the 23d. These are by far the most important pictures Zanuck made last year and he wants personally to see they get off to a good start. "Blue Bird" is expected to do big things for the little Temple girl and, as for "Grapes of Wrath," it has been the most widely discussed story of the era, with the exception, of course, of "Gone With the Wind."

Snapshots of Hollywood and Chicago collected at random: Gene Raymond, bothered by his throat for a long time, checks into the Cedars of Lebanon today for a tonsillectomy; Lupe Velez's new interest is Brandy Brent; everybody at the Bali thought Pat Dane, Rudy Vallee's girl friend, looked just like Hedy Lamarr until Hedy herself walked in with Gene Markey; Ernest Byfield and Frank Bering were hosts at one of the most elaborate dinners given us since we started our tour, in the pump room at the Ambassador. The chef outdid himself and I am taking home some of his recipes to spring on my friends. Mrs. Bering, who is a former actress, is very pretty and he assisted her husband and Mr. Byfield in entertaining us. We all went back to the theater too well fed for comfort.

Well, tomorrow ends our tour and I am leaving in a few hours for home, carrying with me grateful remembrances of Chicago. What a heart-warming reception we have had. The Dixon papers have gone to town for Ronald Reagan, as well as for yours truly, who graduated from the Dixon High School (in different years, of course). School friends by the dozens came to call. Lolita and Ardo, the wonderful dancers we saw in San Francisco, have been signed for Earl Carroll's Hollywood revue and they were nice enough to wire me that a mention in this column got them the opportunity.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

"THE NIGHT OF NIGHTS." Paramount picturization of an original screen play by Donald Ogden Stewart, featuring Pat O'Brien, Olympe Bradna and Roland Young, with Reginald Gardiner, George E. Stone, Murray Alper, Frank Sully, Russ Powell, Wyndham Standing, Pat O'Malley, Frank Shannon, Theodor Von Eltz, Aileen Pringle and numerous others. Directed by Lewis Milestone. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

Time is marching on the double-quick! For Pat O'Brien, long the love-interest boy, grows both a daughter and a mustache in "The Night of Nights." And a great, big beautiful daughter, too—meaning Olympe Bradna. Pat may have had a couple of movie children before, but they were the tiny, oothless kind. The funny part is that Pat looks younger than he did a couple of seasons ago, seems a bit juvenile to be any kind of a daddy.

Away back in 1919, it appears that Pat and his alcoholic pal, Roland Young, completely wrecked an opening night on Broadway by getting so plastered that they toppled over the footlights. The leading lady, who was Mrs. Pat and "expecting" in the bargain, was so piqued that she walked right out of her hotel door into nothingness—never could be found . . . Years pass. And Pat, a broken man, sits around the Lambs' Club riffling through magazines. Comes a letter bearing the news that he has a 19-year-old daughter, who's been reared in a Canadian convent, and is now on her way to see daddy.

From here it's just a hop, skip and a jump to Pat and his Broadway friends reviving the play that failed so disgracefully 20 years before, with daughter Olympe in her mother's role. The show, handicapped and sneered at, clicks over to a big success.

There are tears and giggles, binges and heartaches in "Night of Nights." Little Olympe sings one song, a little French one, very prettily. Pat O'Brien dominates the picture in his usual off-hand but expert manner. Among the fine troupers are Roland Young, Reginald Gardiner, George E. Stone and Mary Gordon. Playing a ritzy saleslady is Aileen Pringle whose name was up in lights not so long ago.

Leon Errol, most dependably funny man in Hollywood, stars in a short called "Truth Aches." There's a Crawford organ specialty introducing 13-year-old Jessie, daughter of the Crawfords and spittin' image of Father Jesse. The news reel skips the war this time and bears down on spring hats and ice skating.

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Jan. 12.

Best part of a columnist's day is the letters she gets. But the type of letter that stops me cold is one postmarked "Jail." One came in this morning — from a chap who signs himself "Hopeful Tom" of Tank so-and-so, Los Angeles County jail. First Tom has some nice things to say about Jailer Clem Peeples — then he goes on with what's wrong with the world. "I'll be glad when they get George Raft away from jails," he says, "he's spent more time in them than I have and he must be tired of them. I read "Gone With the Wind," (which gives you an idea how long Tom's been incarcerated), and I sure want to see the picture. Think it's wonderful the way Cary Grant, David Niven and those other boys have offered their services to England. Why not send little Sonya Henie over to lead the Finnish army on skates against Russia? Russia used women in its army, didn't it? I served in the 124th Field Artillery in the last war and hope our boys don't get into the second. I drove horses pulling old 75's and I don't mind telling you I wasn't the only soldier who cried when he said good-by to his old team. Why can't they shut war news down? Crime doesn't pay, even in its mildest forms. Well, I'm due out in April, 1940. I imagine things are better out there—with Garbo smiling and Seabiscuit trying for a comeback. I'm sure he'll make it too, his spirit has never been broken, and as a lover of horses I'm taking my cue from that."

HOPPER

How times change. Last year Shirley Temple started the March of Dimes for the President's Infantile Paralysis Fund, this year it was Judy Garland and Mickey Rooney who made the short which will be seen in all the theaters. Slowly but surely they're working up to a grown-up star.

Miriam Hopkins was sitting for some pictures at Warners when one of the overhead lights dropped. "I'd understand that," she smiled, "if I'd been here longer"—which makes me think she's heard some of those things said about her temperament, but I like Miriam's fighting spirit—she let's no one put anything over on her—hear she may marry Bennett Cerf . . . Other studios, restaurants, homes and clubs ought to copy the sign displayed at Paramount: "No War Talk—Please!"

Patricia Ellis went to the annual bird show at the Wilshire Ebell Club, wearing a hat with a funny feather on it. A giant cockatoo, probably mistaking it for a long lost brother, jumped from his perch and almost tore up the hat before it could be rescued. "And for everybody else Cockatoos sing!" laughed Pat.

Speaking of birds, they imported two from the Flamingo family from South Africa for "Swiss Family Robinson" and nicknamed them "Hitler" and "Stalin" because they had a nasty habit—when anybody passed they'd reach and snip off a portion of that person's clothing which they couldn't snip off if the victim were seated!

If mamma leaves them alone that romance between Bob Stack and Cobina Wright, jr., could become serious in 24 hours. Poor Cobina—both she and Joan Fontaine wore swollen faces all during the holiday season. Wisdom tooth trouble.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Professing Complete Indifference to Men, Woman Flouts Theory That She Is Lonely or Peculiar

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Do you believe it could ever be considered natural for a woman to be wholly unattracted to the opposite sex? And if not, could such a nature have been caused by early childhood resentments inspired by brothers, a ne'er-do-well father or other male relatives?

I am past 30 and such is my plight, if it can be called a plight. My father drank and was mean to my mother. My two brothers were always good-for-nothing and cruel to us girls, even in grammar school, and apparently sought to pattern their lives after father's.

My favorite aunt had two worthless husbands and in my mature years I have seen enough bad marriages to discourage even the most ardent advocate of the so-called blessed estate. But further than that, I've never been really interested in men. I have always preferred my own society or the company of other women. And don't think that a false statement; it is the literal truth.

Sometimes I am secretly amused to see what women will tolerate from men, just for the sake of having a husband or some man's companionship. Other times, I have been disgusted by the "stag" conversations I have overheard among men in various offices where I have worked—when they start panning their wives or girl friends or making them the butt of their perverted sense of humor and jokes.

And when some woman who doesn't know me well seems concerned over my "loneliness," I could laugh in her face. It is so funny. Why, I make a salary beside which the average man's is anemic. On top of that, I have a very comfortable home, sufficient money and leisure to enjoy life as I like it, and I'm not supporting or contributing to the support of a husband, father, brothers, uncles, cousins or any other male parasite such as I've known quite a number of other women to have on their "dependent" list.

Yet if I were to dare express my opinions freely in public, people would look at me as if to say: "Poor thing. Someone really ought to persuade her to see a psychiatrist." Maybe the world's right and I'm wrong, but isn't it just barely possible that not every woman in the world pines for lack of a husband? Isn't it also true that a woman is better off without any husband, than with a bad husband?

Oh, yes, one last thing, before somebody thinks of it and lets me have it. I've had three proposals of marriage. What do you say, Miss Haworth? Be honest, now. L. A. P.

Case of Woman Who Distrusts Men

DEAR L. A. P.: According to Webster's dictionary, the word "natural" means, among other things, "that which is truly representative or expressive of one's sentiment." No one would deny, I think, that there is—and always has been—a small percentage of women who are sincerely disinterested in men. It is "natural" for such women serenely to pursue a life of single blessedness. (And, by the way, it is the single life which is commonly referred to as "blessed." Your own ironic allusion to marriage as the "so-called blessed estate," is my first introduction to the term used in that connection.)

Nearly everyone with a broad social acquaintanceship has known some few women distinctly "of the world," (not to mention women leading cloistered lives as members of religious orders), who are emotionally as unresponsive to men as other individuals (of either sex) are unresponsive to classical music, let us say; or children or dogs, or the philosophy of Plato, or Chinese art, etc., etc.

However, the woman who is "naturally" psychologically independent of men is subtly different from you—in that she is, for the most part, happily unaware both of the male sex (collectively and individually) and of her dissimilarity to the average woman who needs must love and be loved by some man, if her life is to be complete. Your own attitude, both toward men and toward your vaunted self sufficiency, is much more self conscious, you must admit. It amounts to a challenge and a taunt. It is expressive of contempt and fear; of defiant distrust rather than of bonafide detachment.

It seems clear from your story that "early childhood resentments" incurred by "ne'er-do-well" male relatives are responsible for your mocking disdain of the sex—a disdain which carries over to include the artless average woman who candidly mollycoddles "her man." Your well paid professional success—beside which the average man's seems "anemic," to use your words—may have been subconsciously intended as a camouflaged insult to the species; or, on the other hand, it may be a form of compensation for the bulwark of masculine companionship which your essential nature craves, but which your conscious mind prevents you from seeking or accepting. In any event, your "edgy" awareness of the fact that you are "doing all right" without a man suggests, to me, that it has been and continues to be a somewhat laborious performance.

Now, as to whether "a woman is better off without any husband than with a bad husband,"—that, in my opinion, is an academic question to which the individual woman alone can supply the fitting answer. There are persons—men as well as women—who can turn even unfortunate experiences to profit, in terms of strengthened character and increased understanding of life and humanity. And there are women who would feel that half a loaf—or even crumbs—of marital experience are better than no such experience at all. M. H.

Paint Pictures On Glass

YES, YOU can paint this lovely picture, "Sunflowers and Zinnias!" And think how it will look in rich flower colors—and in its actual size, 9 by 12 inches.

The painting you do on glass this simple way. Place under the glass your design already printed on paper. Follow the design exactly as you paint. And by this same method you can paint other beautiful subjects too—skyscrapers, treasure ships, an old windmill.

Your paints? Tubes of blue, red and yellow oils which you can get from the 5-and-10. Mix them according to your color chart to make any color. Red, blue and yellow, for instance, make brown. For darker tones mix in black household enamel, for lighter tones, white household enamel.

The printed design for "Sunflowers and Zinnias" is given in our set, "Six Pictures to Paint On Glass." Includes "Skyscrapers," "Old Windmill," "Treasure Ships at Sea," "Poplars by the River," "Fishing Village"—all 9 by 12 inches in size. Chart tells how to mix and apply color, what colors to use for each design.

Send 15c in coins for our set of "Six Pictures to Paint On Glass" to The Washington Post Institute, 109 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write lainly your name and address.

Beachcomber Fashions of Celanese

Celanese Supplanting Pure Silk Generally, Except in Hosiery

Has Sleek Smoothness That Repels Dirt And Cuts Cleaning Bills; Especially Good For Swim Suits; Also for Wash Dresses

By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor

DID YOU KNOW that Celanese silks are the highest quality fabrics in that vastly growing family of rayon materials? That pure raw silk is scarcely used now, except for hosiery? That because of a sleek smoothness of the yarn used in Celanese garments dust, soot and grit are repelled more easily, thus eliminating over-persistent cleaning bills? And that because of this same eel-like smoothness, Celanese swim suits are worn almost exclusively by Eleanor Holm and other aquatic stars to aid in cutting down the resistance—and seconds—in water competition?

Marshall Adams

These are but a few of the merits of Celanese, according to laboratory and fashion experts from the vast Celanese Corporation of America, who arrived en masse this week to propagate the virtues of this yarn. Their efforts culminated last night in the presentation of the most gala style show of the new season. More than 50 costumes, in swim, resort and formal versions, were shown to the enlightenment of 500 women who swarmed the Blue Room of the Shoreham Hotel during the dinner hour.

Can't Bleach or "Bleed"

Enlightening, indeed, proved the Celanese review since many of the spectators probably arrived with the opinion that Celanese was just another "cheap" synthetic yarn that would singe and frizzle if it looked at a match, or wither at the sight of alcoholic beverages, faults formerly blamed erroneously to this test-tube yarn. Gleaned from the showing were the following proved benefits of Celanese:

That it's noninflammable, nonshrinkable and often tubable when specified.

That it won't bleach in the sun and that black and white prints cannot "bleed" or run, due to pure nonsilkworm colors being used in dying. The fact that Celanese is guaranteed bleach-proof should be a boon to the many Washingtonians who will live in nothing else but whites come hot weather. Celanese is bleached at no time, and therefore cannot "turn" yellow as does pure silk.

Texture Variations

An interesting feature of Celanese which we never knew till now is that "Celbrook," one of the crisp cruise fabrics made by the Celanese factories, is really the original "sharkskin" material. Although sharkskin has become a yardage term known to everyone who wears hot-weather clothes, men and women alike, it was originally called Celbrook by Celanese when it was first introduced to California playgrounds six years ago—the movie people giving its gleaming surface the more descriptive name of sharkskin.

A number of intriguing surface finishes in the Celanese yarn family were featured on the Shoreham's runway. One of them was "Jersanese," one of the most seductive jerseys ever to be made into dinner or spectator sports dresses. Not only is this jersey closely knit, which means it is stretch-proof, but it is run-proof, just like your hose is supposed to be. There also is a "Wingstrut," which is a weave made of thick-and-thin yarns to create a pleasing cross-checkered texture to the material.

Stripes Feature Resort Clothes

They're to be found in everything, from sunbonnets and parasols to play shoes. Most of them are discreet two-toned effects—navy blues, reds, greens, yellows or browns combined with white—but a few gay rainbow striped cottons add colorful variety.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Jan. 12.

AFTER A close look at what is loosely, and even comically called "New York Society," for the past three months of the current season, I am sure that the current situation in our world metropolis calls loudly for the services of a modern Historian Gibbon. For our little Rome, I feel, is about to fall.

Alice Hughes

Everything says so. The whole emphasis, this winter, is on the big and costly. Spending proceeds as though we were again in the fateful winter of 1928-29. New Year's Eve, in the cafes and deadfalls, was an unparalleled debauch. One host eloquently said that he had never seen his customers in such "a winey mood"—a perfect description. Unless the cork popped, during the holidays, the bottled goods were cheap, uninteresting and slightly vulgar.

At such colossal events as horse show openings or a benefit prize fight, we no longer go to peer amiably at the faces in the boxes, but to count the chinchilla wraps. If Mrs. Watriss, Brenda Frazier's mother, wears hers, the breathtaking news is proudly recorded in all the papers. By March, these expensive pelts may be so common that their owners may toss them into the trash can, and go in for something really rare, like the fur of the three-toed sloth.

The same goes for jewels. Unless a diamond ring or a wrist bangle of ruby weighs 2 pounds, it doesn't count in the score. Miss Peggy Hopkins Joyce, local bachelor girl, and Miss Mabel Boll, who own two of our richest resident collections, must have felt a little badly when a lady appeared at a night club wearing the huge "Jonker" diamond, jocosely priced at $1,000,000. She was guarded by three heavy dicks wearing derby hats. New York says spend it if you've got it—if not, borrow it. The town is racing, drunkenly, to its appointed end, so rush over fast if you want to get a last dizzy look at the New World's craziest spot. By 1941 there may be only a flying flock of buzzards.

Austrian Beauty Chosen Successor To Hedy LaMarr

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The successor to Hedy Lamarr has been chosen. I don't mean by us movie fans, of course, but by Mr. Fritz Mandl, who used to be married to Hollywood's static star when he was an Austrian munitions baron. He has been introducing wife No. 2 around town lately—a blonde from the Austrian stage of the name of Herta Schneider. Well, Hedy was midnight dark, and Fritz is probably smart to switch colors, if only for variety.

If you want to go out to our wonderful new airport on Long Island and see the big silver ships come in, it will cost you money. So huge have the visiting crowds been, hampering the field's activities, that it now costs 10 cents to stand on the observation deck and ogle the planes, and a quarter to park.

Vanity Main Bar to Feminine Success

Causes Failures in Love and Business, Says, Dr. Nutall

WOMEN'S failures in love and career are due to personality deficiencies, chief of which are exaggerated vanity, materialistic viewpoint, failure to lend a sympathetic ear to men's struggles and disappointments, according to Dr. Maude S. Nutall, personality consultant.

"If the average woman would listen more understandingly to her mate," said Dr. Nutall, "she would find a more devoted and contented companion. Too often instead of listening appreciatively, the wife or sweetheart breaks forth with a flow of abuse or a list of her own woes. This attitude thwarts and discourages any man."

To keep the undivided interest of a husband or lover, a woman should refrain from all criticism and never under any circumstances deflate his ego, she said, explaining that the worthwhile man feels that he is doing everything within his power for her comfort and happiness. Therefore, he resents criticism. Constant nagging, she declared, turns men into neurotics, and contrary to popular belief, more men are neurotic than women. This she attributes to the woman's incessant financial demands.

Vanity Blamed

"Desire for luxuries—which the average woman insist upon," she said, "drive the man so hard to meet her requirements, that he becomes harassed and nervous.

This friendly, unassuming woman, who is scholarly without being pedantic bases her opinions on countless interviews with men and women in all walks of life, who seek her advice on personality problems.

Vanity is to blame for nearly all of women's troubles—or rather "conflicts," maintains Dr. Nutall, who was a student of the late Dr. Alfred Adler, famous Viennese psychologist and founder of the school of "Individual Psychology."

For instance, she said, in love and marriage woman's first concern is hurt vanity; if she loses her husband to another woman she resents the fact that he has found someone more interesting, rather than regretting the loss of his love.

While sex should not be discounted, Dr. Nutall believes that it is overly exaggerated and that it is by no means the most important factor in a happy marriage. And though she thinks that a woman should make the most of her natural beauty by being as physically attractive as possible, it should be kept in mind that real men—intelligent thinking men with the proper sense of values in life look for something in woman beyond mere physical appeal.

Biblical Theory Favored

For a successful marriage, Dr. Nutall advocates the Biblical theory of gaining one's life while losing it. In explanation of this theory, she says: "A woman should lose her life in her husband's to the extent of keeping pace with him mentally, so she can manifest interest in his work and activities insofar as he desires interest—that is to discuss and forget at his will. She must contribute and cooperate all she can if she expects a full measure of devotion in return, for a real marriage is a matter of going together along a friendly road."

Self centeredness or lack of interest in other people is another personality deficiency that spoils a woman's chance of happiness, according to Dr. Nutall who says, "A vital, kindly interest in other people is necessary for a warm, colorful, winning personality. Poise, mental alertness, sincerity, femininity, naturalness, sincerity and the recognition of the fact that she is a woman first, last and always are other attributes that make up a composite womanly personality."

Here are the average woman's predominant personality deficiencies as seen by this woman whose one purpose in life is to help other people: Exaggerated vanity; demanding, exacting qualities; nagging; emotional immaturity (reacting childishly to situations instead as an adult); jealousy; domination (this loses more sweethearts and husbands than any other one quality).

"No personality deficiency is so great that it may not be overcome," said Dr. Nutall, "if the woman is willing to make a conscientious effort to improve." So great is her belief that most problems can be solved by a sympathetic, intelligent and objective viewpoint of a person who is sincerely interested in other people, that she has set up an office in Washington for that purpose. As the "Friendly Conselor," she proposes to help (without remuneration) men and women solve their personality problems. Also she will discuss personality traits in a series of broadcasts over a local radio station.

The establishment of the "Friendly Counselor" bureau is the outgrowth of a long-cherished dream. Serving as her assistant is Cyril P. Dickson, local attorney, who sets aside part of his working time to give counsel to those perplexed with everyday problems. His role is not that of a lawyer or legal adviser but that of a quiet, keen analysist, dynamically interested in the welfare of the average man and woman who needs a sympathetic ear.

Diners Transported To Beethoven's Day

'Time Machine' Set Into Operation by Judge Davis at Fifth Annual Musical Party of Mr. and Mrs. Lowell B. Mason

A time machine that transported the guests back to the days of Beethoven was the outstanding feature of the fifth annual musical dinner given last night by Mr. and Mrs. Lowell B. Mason. Many musically-minded members of the newly returned Congress were in the large group present.

These yearly parties reenact some episode in the life of one of the great musical masters of ages past. Judge Edwin L. Davis, chairman of th Federal Trade Commission, and brother of Red Cross Chairman Norman Davis, always presides, and Mrs. Mason, who is known in the concert world as Rose d'Amore, pianist, furnishes the music.

After dinner, Mr. Mason introduced Judge Davis to the other guests as a great authority on the history of music and asked him to give a talk on Beethoven. The Judge, however, replied that his recent election as chairman of the Trade Commission had kept him too busy to study up on his subject, and begged to be excused.

At this point, another guest, Senator William H. King, pointed to the Time Machine that Mr. Mason prepared in conjunction with Donald Patterson of the Research Division of the Library of Congress, and suggested that instead of bringing Beethoven back to life, the host put Judge Davis into the machine and turn its dials back to the period at which the composer wrote his "Moonlight Sonata."

The Judge, a good sport, evidently, agreed, and, bidding goodby to his fellow diners, obligingly seated himself in the machine. The lights went out, smoke, powder and electrical flashes issued in uncanny manner from the instrument, and suddenly there was flashed on the screen behind the machine a movie of Judge Davis traveling through the clouds on his way back through time to the year 1840.

Movie Takes Guests Back a Century

The motion picture, which was filmed by the enterprising Mr. Mason a month ago, showed the judge arriving at last in Vienna, where he enters the studio of the great master, Ludwig von Beethoven, played by Claus Bogel, a former Shakespearian actor. He was dressed in the costume of the period, as was Prince Lichnowsky, the artist's patron, played by Carl Hoffman. Both registered surprise at the sight of a citizen of 1940 arriving in evening dress.

After some conversation between the characters, Judge Davis requested Beethoven to play the Moonlight Sonata. The high point of the evening was when Mrs. Mason, dressed as Princess Giulettia, a pupil of Beethoven's, obliges instead.

Mr. Mason, who besides being a music-lover, is a leading lawyer in the Capital, had invited upwards of 50 friends to this unusual party. Among them were Mrs. Burton K. Wheeler, wife of Senator Wheeler; Senator and Mrs. Edwin Johnson, Representative Everett M. Dirksen, Representative and Mrs. Ralph E. Church, Dr. Kurt Hetzel, conductor of Washington's Civic Orchestra; W. A. Ayres, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Weigester and Mr. and Mrs. Kingman Brewster.

Trade Commissioner Among Guests

Others there were Robert E. Freer, of the Federal Trade Commission, with Mrs. Freer; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Buck, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Droop, Robert Crosser, Richard J. Carr, C. C. Cappel, of the National Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Cappel, and the Misses Agnes and Elena Crivella.

Still others, many of whom have attended other musical dinners given by the Masons, included Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Helsper, Mr. and Mrs. Sam M. Jones, William T. Kelley, Mr. and Mrs. Eliot C. Lovett, Mrs. Charles H. March, James McAndrews, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Mearns, Miss Helen Jean Nolan, Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Snow, jr., and Dr. Clifford Swanson.

Judge and Mrs. George Williams, Mrs. Maude Wiggins, Claude V. Parsons, Miss Janice Knight, Mr. and Mrs. Garland S. Ferguson, the Rev. and Mrs. U. G. B. Pierce, Mrs. F. Vernon Foster and Mr. and Mrs. William C. Park were others at this unique party.

Mrs. Thorpe Honors Carrs

The former United States Minister to Czecho-Slovakia and Mrs. Wilbur Carr were guests in whose honor Mrs. George Thorpe entertained at dinner last evening at her home on Woodley road.

An original device for inducing guests to talk on unusually interesting subjects was initiated by the hostess, who had written a suitable topic on each place card.

Senator Arthur Capper was the ranking guest and others in the company included Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Thomas Holcomb, D. C. Commissioner and Mrs. David McCoach, the Federal Security Administrator and Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, the former Attorney General, Homer S. Cummings, and the hostess' son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. William Powell.

Capt. Read, British Attache, Is Host At Luncheon

Col. R. V. Read, military attache of the British Embassy, entertained a company at luncheon yesterday in the Louis Seize room of the Shoreham. Among the guests were Col. E. R. Warner McCabe, the Military Attache of the French Embassy and Mme. Lombard, Col. and Mrs. John Crain and Group Captain G. C. Pirie, of the British Embassy, and Mrs. Pirie.

Another luncheon yesterday at the Shoreham was one given by Mrs. James H. Hughes, wife of the Senator from Delaware. Guest of honor was Mrs. Louis Emery, jr., of Bradford, Pa.

Others in the party were Mrs. William E. Borah, Mrs. Franklyn Schneider, Lady Leslie, Mrs. Neitah King, Mrs. Walter Wyatt and Mrs. Bryson Norris.

The musicale for joint benefit of the Finnish relief fund and the American Red Cross at the Sulgrave Club next Thursday is meeting with a generous response from Washington society. Artists will be Mme. Henrietta Bagger Plum, Danish mezzo soprano, and Reino Luoma, Finnish-American pianist, who has played here with the National Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, a member of the committee in charge, has returned from Florida to join Miss Alma H. Ruggles, treasurer, and the chairman, Mrs. Emil Hurja, in final plans for the concert.

Several young ladies will usher that afternoon. In the group will be Countess Sylvia Szechenyi, Miss Helen Davis, Miss Beatrice Philipps, Miss Angelica Lloyd, Miss Rebecca Wellington and Mrs. Edward B. McLean, jr.

Grace Lucille Carr Married At St. Alban's to Mr. Geddes

MRS. GAIL GRAY GEDDES

The Rev. Charles T. Warner Officiates As Washington Girl Becomes Bride of New Jersey Man in Evening Ceremony

St. Alban's Church was the scene of the marriage of Miss Grace Lucille Carr and Gail Gray Geddes, of Montclair, N. J., last evening at 8 o'clock. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Arthur Carr, of 5053 Massachusetts avenue. Mr. Geddes is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bond P. Geddes, of Chevy Chase, Md. The Rev. Charles T. Warner officiated at the ceremony.

Flowers adorned the altar and palms had been placed on either side. Miss Charlotte Klein, organist, played both Wagner's and Mendelssohn's wedding march. She played for a half-hour before the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, William Arthur Carr. Her ivory satin gown was of Polonaise Pannier drapes with a cascade bustle back. The full length veil of illusion was held with tiny clusters of orange blossoms. Her only ornament was a strand of pearls, a gift from the bridegroom. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. W. A. Carr Is Matron of Honor

Matron of honor was Mrs. William Arthur Carr, whose ensemble was of marsh-rose crepe. Her hip-length jacket was effectively trimmed in the same color sutach braid and the gown had a straight skirt, full in the back. She wore a doll hat of transparent flowers in the new wine shade. She carried a bouquet of roses.

The remaining attendants were Mrs. Seth Gordon, jr., Mrs. Bruce B. Geddes, Mrs. Eugene E. Krewson, Mrs. Robert F. Ruffner, of Raleigh, N. C.; Miss Bertha Randall and Miss Katherine Hicks, of Rocky Mount, N. C.

They wore jacket frocks of seafoam aquamarine crepe with full peplum influence at the back, and epaulets and pockets in self trim. The four gored skirts fell full from the waistline. They carried muffs, matching hats and roses.

Brother Serves As Best Man

Bruce B. Geddes, brother of the bridegroom, served as best man, and ushers were Oliver T. Carr, Clifford E. Harrison, jr., of Montclair, N. J.; Addison C. Armstrong, jr., David W. Hoppock, of Maplewood, N. J.; George E. Miller, and R. Curtis Reed, jr., of East Milton, Mass.

There was a reception at the home of the bride's mother on Massachusetts avenue. Mrs. Carr had selected a deep purple velvet gown with a matching hat and orchid corsage. Mrs. Geddes was gowned in a ciel blue ensemble, trimmed in bands of gold and rhinestones. Her corsage was of orchids also.

To Make Home In New Jersey

When the couple left for their wedding trip in the South, the bride was wearing an old rose sheer wool frock and hat with a squirrel jacket. A cluster of orchids completed the ensemble. They will make their home in Orange, N. J.

Among the out-of-town guests attending the ceremony were Mr. and Mrs. E. Lee LeCompte, of Cambridge, Md.; Mrs. R. Curtis Reed, jr., of East Milton, Mass.; Walter Amesbury, of New York City; Mr. and Mrs. Seth Gordon, of Harrisburg, Pa.; Robert Ruffner, of Raleigh, N. C.; Mrs. John Thiem, of Raleigh, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Armstrong, of Baltimore, and Frank McGregor, of New York City.

Mrs. Geddes attended Meredith College in Raleigh, N. C. The bridegroom attended Dartmouth and received his Master of Commercial Science degree from the Amos Tuck School of Administration and Finance.

Kees Entertain At Party Before White House Fete

Mr. and Mrs. James Kee, son and daughter-in-law of Representative and Mrs. John Kee, entertained a few friends informally in their apartment at the Methodist Building Thursday evening before the Congressional reception at the White House.

Among their guests were Representative Thomas C. Burch, Representative and Mrs. William R. Poage, Representative and Mrs. A. L. Ford, Representative and Mrs. A. C. Schiffler, Representative and Mrs. Robert J. Corbett, Representative and Mrs. John McDowell, Representative and Mrs. R. B. Chiperfield and Representative and Mrs. Charles Hawks, jr.

Still others there were Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Bird, of Sandy Spring, Md., Dr. Howard F. Strine, Mr. and Mrs. C. Roy Mundee, Mr. and Mrs. Harman Woodward, jr., and Mitchell Erickson.

Aulds Entertain At Dinner Tonight

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Shields Auld of Takoma Park, Md., are entertaining at a dinner tonight at their home in honor of Mr. and Mrs. John L. McIntosh, of Washington whose marriage took place the early part of December.

Other guests will include Dr. and Mrs. Rudolph Snyder of University Park, Md., parents of Mrs. McIntosh, Mrs. Charles Knott, Miss Charlotte Knott, Lewis Doudt, William McIntosh and Donald and Richard Auld.

Many Plan to Attend Schiffeler Hunt Dinner

A number of Washington notables are planning to attend the second annual Pompano and Partridge Hunt Dinner in the Pall Mall Room of the Hotel Raleigh on Thursday, January 18, at 8 p. m.

The event is one in a series of unique dinners held at the Raleigh this season and last under the direction of Col. C. C. Schiffeler. An unusual feature of the program for the coming dinner will be a series of old square dances in which guests may participate under the direction of Gene Gowing.

Huston Thompson to Lead Town Hall Questioning

Huston Thompson will preside over the panel selected to question Dr. Julian Huxley after his lecture on "Science, War and Reconstruction" tomorrow evening at the first meeting of the season of the Town Hall at 8 o'clock at the Shoreham.

Also members of the panel will be Representative T. V. Smith, who is professor of philosophy at the University of Chicago, and founded the Round Table discussions there, and Dr. Ernest R. Moulton, executive secretary for the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Fetes Precede Friday Supper Club Meeting

Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Doeg Among Those Giving Diners

Several dinners were given before last evening's meeting of the Friday Supper Club at the Sulgrave. The party was the fourth of the five subscription dances of the winter series.

Mrs. John R. Williams, organizer of these popular dances, gave a dinner at her home before the dance and later occupied her usual table at the entrance to the club ballroom. Her guests were Rear Admiral and Mrs. George T. Pettengill, Gen. and Mrs. Edwin Watson, Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, Mr. and Mrs. Jasper DuBose, Dr. and Mrs. Harry Kerr, Miss Margaret Frazier, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll Morgan, Commander William Thomas, William Littaeur and John Hammond.

Mrs. Doeg Gives Dinner

Fifty members of the younger set gathered at the home of Mrs. Scudder Doeg on McGill Terrace for an unusual dinner before the dance. Mrs. Doeg, who puts lots of time and thought into her entertaining, had on hand several members of the colored orchestra which played at her coming-out party in New York, and who came to Washington to sing for the guests at her dinner. As the hostess hates buffet suppers, she seated her guests at several small tables centered with red poinsettias and white carnations. The girls drew names from one of the mens' top hats for dinner partners.

James Hamiltons Have Another Riding Star in Family—a Baby Son

THE JAMES C. HAMILTONS, of Warrenton, have another candidate for their family riding team which has won many honors in pony and jumping classes. They are being congratulated on the birth of a son on Monday at the Fauquier County Hospital.

All their friends are hoping that the new arrival, for whom a name has not yet been selected, will follow in the footsteps of his sister, Miss Peggy Keith Hamilton, and his brothers, Jimmy and Barry, who are among the best young riders in the country. With their parents, they are constant winners in family classes.

PEGGY HAMILTON was eligible to ride in the special horsemanship class for children at last year's Madison Square Garden show, after having won the class at a Virginia horse show, but her mother preferred having her wait a year because of her age.

Mrs. Hamilton formerly was Miss Peggy Keith and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julian Keith, of Warrenton. She is one of the outstanding horsewomen of America and at one time was picked as the leading farm girl of the United States. Her father, Julian Keith, is a former M. F. H. of Warrenton Hunt and for 25 years was president of the Warrenton Horse Show. Last year Mr. Keith rode to hounds on his eightieth birthday and was feted at a large reception that afternoon given by Mrs. Keith and their children.

ONE OF THE gayest parties of the season, in which only men will share, promises to be the one Raymond Tartiere, of Middleburg, has arranged for this afternoon at the Fauquier Club in Warrenton. The party, a "smoker," will begin at 3 o'clock and is for the benefit of France. Active with Mr. Tartiere in organizing the benefit are Richard Kirkpatrick, Hugh Spilman, "Bunny" Winmill, Robert C. Winmill, and David Batchelder.

The gentlemen attending will play cards and other games and sample a supper of delicious turkey and old Virginia ham. Beside the enormous fireplace in the club basement white-coated waiters will brew tea and hot toddies.

D. A. R. Told Dope Sale Is Worst Crime

Peddlers Are Worse Than Murderers, Dr. Nolan, Criminal Justice Head, Says

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Suppression of the narcotics traffic in the District lies in longer sentences for dope peddlers, Dr. James Allen Nolan, director of the Criminal Justice Association, told members of the D. A. R. yesterday. Dr. Nolan, addressing the January meeting of the committee on national defense through patriotic education, declared no such criminal ever should be put on probation.

Dope peddlers, making wrecks of human lives, sending men out to rob, plunder and sometimes to kill as a result of their addiction to the drug and need of money to buy it, are worse than murderers, he said. Only sentences long enough to break their connections and keep them where they cannot continue their business are effective in curbing the illicit traffic, he asserted.

Dr. Nolan cited one case here in which a peddler was arrested, gave bond and was released awaiting trial, but was rearrested for making another sale 35 minutes after he had left the courthouse. He put up bond again and a few months later was tried and placed under probation.

Judges in Maryland and Virginia now are giving increasingly stiff sentences which are proving effective in those States, said Nolan, and there is a trend toward heavier sentences in the District also.

Although questions from members of the audience indicated they were chiefly aroused by reports of the use of marihuana among high school students, Dr. Nolan indicated that most of these, when investigated, were discovered to be unfounded. The drug which is giving serious concern in Washington is heroin, he said.

Although major crimes showed a decrease of 34 per cent in 1938, there was an increase of 11 per cent in the first six months of 1939 and this, largely, was traceable to drug addicts; of those arrested 80 per cent were colored, 60 per cent of them under 30 years of age; the District, smaller than Philadelphia, has seven times as many drug peddlers as that city, Dr. Nolan stated.

Mrs. Frank H. Towner presided at the meeting and announced a luncheon would follow the February 9 session of the committee, which will mark the close of her second year as its chairman. Mrs. William T. Clark is in charge of arrangements.

Preceding Dr. Nolan's talk yesterday, the committee adopted a resolution urging continuance of the Dies Committee investigating un-American activities, and another in opposition to Senate Bill No. 1650. This bill, introduced by Senator Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, provides for mobilization of wealth, as well as manpower in time of war.

Vassar Alumnae To Meet Today

Washington alumnae of Vassar College will meet for luncheon today at the Y. W. C. A. to discuss plans for doing their bit toward raising the $2,000,000 endowment fund to celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the institution. Mrs. Waldron Faulkner, local chairman of the anniversary fund committee, will preside.

A number of special gifts already have been received by the Washington chapter, the amount of which will be announced at the meeting. Progress of the campaign will be marked by rise in the "mercury" of the 6-foot "thermometer" which has been constructed to be shown at the fund luncheons, to be held from time to time through the winter.

Two recent contributions for the fund at large have been one from Paul Mellon, of Pittsburgh, of $180,000, and one from Edward Harkness, of New York, of $100,000. One-half the amount to be raised is for scholarship aid and the other for general educational work, including faculty salaries. Vassar holds a record of cutting neither salaries nor staff in the years of financial strain.

Assisting Mrs. Faulkner in the campaign will be the following officers of the Washington Alumnae Association: Mrs. Charles Will Wright, president; Mrs. Lee D. Butler, vice president; Miss Louise Engle, secretary; committee chairmen, Miss Helen Zartman, Mrs. Roger Robb, Mrs. Lionel Summers, Mrs. Fred Livesey, Miss Theodora Malone, Mrs. Wallace Yater and Miss Margaret Lambie.

Wives' Right to Work Periled, Miss Mary Winslow Declares

Leader of Women's Trade Union League Warns on Bills to Bar Married Women From Jobs; Urges Action

The growing opposition to the employment of married women is a serious menace not only to the married women themselves but to all the processes of democracy, Miss Mary E. Winslow, a member of the executive board of the National Women's Trade Union League, declared yesterday.

Miss Winslow, who is also the United States representative on the Inter-American Commission of Women, went to Baltimore to address a meeting of the Y. W. C. A.

"No one in their senses objects to married women working," said Miss Winslow. "What they do object to is married women working and getting paid for it. And the reason they object to that is because at present there are not enough jobs to go around. It is very easy to say—whether it is true or not—that married women have some one to support them and therefore shouldn't have jobs and take the bread out of other people's mouths.

"We know that this is not true," Miss Winslow went on, "we know that married women are making a splendid contribution to the support of dependents, to raising the standard of living for their families and besides are doing valuable and efficient work in their places of employment. Nevertheless, in 23 States legislatures last year bills were introduced against the employment of married women in public service and there is agitation all over the country on this matter.

"This is not a feminist issue, it is much bigger than that. It is whether or not, we in a democracy, are going to limit opportunity to work to those who can prove their need for such work, or whether we are going to recognize the fact that each individual has a right to work, to set his own standard of living and to work to maintain it."

Miss Winslow declared, "If we are committed to freedom of opportunity there is no conceivable justification for selecting one small group of persons—no matter what the sentiment and traditional idea may be of their necessities and obligation—and prohibiting their employment for any reason except inefficiency and inability to perform the tasks allotted to them.

"It is high time that women recognize this drive against married women's jobs. And they should meet it with positive action. Two countries, in South America, Argentina and Cuba, have handled this situation by enacting legislation prohibiting dismissal from a job because of marriage. I recommend this kind of action to the consideration of the women of the United States. It seems to me to be a possible method of stopping this movement of discrimination against a special class which is against all of our standards guaranteeing freedom of opportunity for every citizen in a democracy."

Laura Stovel, and the past presidents, Mrs. Katherine Kipp Madden, Miss Ada Morgan Hill, George Ray Dickson, Miss Annah M. Fletcher, and by the executive secretary, Miss Elizabeth Brand, in whose honor the tea is being given.

Owen, daughters of the hostess; Miss Minnie Hill, Miss Florence Berryman, Miss Elsie Phelps, Miss Rosalie Kaminsky, Miss Phyllis Montgomery, Mrs. G. R. Dickson and Master Owen Beatty.

At the party the society will celebrate many accomplishments in 1939—briefly, the beginning of participation in the Community Chest program; the employment of an executive secretary; 75 new members, who will be there to celebrate with them; two Gadget Shows, where all devices helpful to the hard of hearing were shown, and the knowledge that this feature set the pace for similar "shows" all over the country.

Also the initiation of the Florence P. Spofford Scholarship Fund by the Young Peoples' Group of the organization, its acceptance by the Board of Education of the District, and the building up of the fund; from which some hard of hearing graduate of the District parochial schools will receive the first college scholarship next June.

The chief aim for 1940 is further to publicize the need of help for the children in the schools with defective hearing.

This is nearer realization than ever before, as the demonstration class of children who have been taught lip reading at the Curtis School, Georgetown, has shown the need; and the work of a subcommittee of the Board of Education in the District, has visioned the result.

Dope Traffic Here Is Laid To Leniency

Short Sentences, Probation Scored At Meeting of Social Council

Holding its first meeting of 1940 yesterday, the corrections committee of the Council of Social Agencies:

Heard one of its members attribute Washington's large volume of narcotics sales to leniency of the courts in dealing with violators.

Witnessed a spirited, though brief, debate on wisdom of the council's recent action in publishing an article, based on secondhand information, which charged narcotics are being sold widely to Capital school children.

Listened to Ray L. Huff, superintendent of District penal institutions, describe physical improvements at the jail and Lorton reformatory.

Appointed a special sub-committee to study feasibility of a system whereby convicted lawbreakers given the choice of fines or jail terms would be permitted to pay fines in stallments. The purpose would be to save the jobs of offenders, for the sake of their families, as well as to keep the jail and workhouse populations down.

Dr. James Allen Nolan, executive director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, criticized the regularity of 6, 12 and 18 month sentences to drug law violators, as well as the frequency of probation, stating that a large percentage of the District's crime is traceable to drug users.

Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue sentenced two dope peddlers yesterday, one receiving 12 to 24 months and the other 12 to 15 months. Both were colored, Norman R. Brown, 29, and Ralph D. Brown, 31.

The former, a non-addict who drew the maximum sentence, was arrested in October with his "boss," a paralytic whose indictments were nolle prossed upon Justice O'Donoghue's recommendation because of his physical disability.

Ralph Brown, an addict and the father of two motherless children, will spend at least part of his term in a Federal hospital. Both men pleaded guilty to sale and possession.

While branding Washington as a "soft spot" for dope sellers, with an illicit trade seven times as great as Philadelphia, Dr. Nolan pointed out that the charges aired by Hugo Wolter in "Community Service" last week had not yet been substantiated.

Charges Modified

It was this article by Wolter, recreation secretary of the Council of Social Agencies, which precipitated a warm debate when its author got up yesterday to defend it. Based upon information furnished to Wolter by a young colored man, the article said "dope" is being sold to school children on an alarming scale.

Subsequently Wolter declared the "dope" referred to was marihuana, a non-habit forming drug generally consumed in cigarette form, and that the conditions were among colored people. Neither of these points was mentioned in the article.

Wolter told the corrections committee he had investigated carefully the character of his informant before publishing the latter's charges in "Community Service." The recreation secretary said he even conferred with a policeman, whom he did not name, on veracity of the accusations, and the conferee assured him they were not exaggerated.

When the publication appeared last week, Wolter's article was criticized by Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown, Narcotics Commissioner H. J. Anslinger and other authorities, on the grounds (1) that an overdrawn picture had been presented and (2) that if such conditions existed Wolter or his informant should have turned over their evidence to the police.

Everett Carries Attack

Ray H. Everett took the floor after Wolter's talk and roundly attacked the council's policy of publishing unsubstantiated rumors.

"Let's investigate before we rush into print," said Everett, executive director of the Washington Social Hygiene Society.

Vincent Saccardi, chairman of the corrections committee, rushed to Wolter's defense with a statement that the council's job is to obtain and disseminate information, not collect evidence.

"If the situation is not corrected by proper authorities," he said, I intend to bring this before the board of directors and ask for more forceful action."

Huff, reviewing improvements at District penal institutions, said that while increased medical and nursing staffs have been provided at the jail, the workhouse at Occoquan continues to house an average of 12,000 prisoners yearly with only one doctor and one nurse in attendance.

He cited progress in teaching illiterates to read and write and said the new cell wings at the District Jail, nearing completion, will correct conditions which long have been deprecated.

Chairman Saccardi named G. Howland Shaw, chief of the State Department's division of foreign service personnel, to head a subcommittee which will seek to determine whether it would be practicable for court fines to be paid in installments.

"The installment system has been adopted in various other jurisdictions," said Shaw. "We believe it might well be introduced here, that homes might be kept intact. For instance, when a judge says '30 days or $30' the defendant would be permitted to pay the fine by installments."

Brightwood Citizens Ask New Car Line

Plan Complaint Buses Are So Crowded They Are Insanitary

Criticizing street car and bus facilities offered their community, members of the Brightwood Citizens Association last night decided on three courses of action:

They adopted a resolution favoring construction of a street railway on New Hampshire avenue from Georgia avenue to Eleventh street northwest.

They authorized a complaint to the Health Department charging that sanitary laws affecting bus conditions are not fully enforced.

They voted to ask the Public Utilities Commission to make student street car and bus pass books available to high school boys and girls who are over 18 years old.

Commuting facilities for the Brightwood area are entirely inadequate, association members declared in talks that led to the resolutions. Buses are so crowded that they become stifling and unsanitary, it was charged.

The transportation situation is particularly acute on Kennedy and upper Sixteenth streets, it was asserted.

Student pass books, offering street car and bus fares at reduced rates, now are available to children 18 years old or younger. But there are many high school students who are 19, or more, one speaker declared. The age limit, it was held, should be extended at least one year.

Other speakers expressed dissatisfaction with lack of street cleaning in the community following the recent storm. Snow and dirt has not been removed as in past years, residents said, and there has been little washing of streets. A complaint to the District Commissioners was recommended.

Bill Would Put Teeth In D. C. Dental Act

A bill to put teeth into the District act regulating the practice of dentistry in Washington was introduced in the House yesterday by Representative Cochran (Democrat), of Missouri.

The bill would prohibit certain unethical practices. It has the support of the District Commissioners and the District Dental Society, Cochran said.

Cue and Curtain Makes Success Of 'Our Town'

By Richard L. Coe.

Around the first local amateur production of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town," George Washington University's Cue and Curtain Club last night spun a web of tender tranquility that was as welcome as it was unexpected. The play will be repeated tonight in the auditorium of the Western Presbyterian Church.

Because this was the first appearance here of Mr. Wilder's scenery-less drama since the Pulitzer Prize winner was played by its original cast at the National, considerable interest was evinced in last evening's performance. One might excusably be inclined to doubt that the village of Grover's Corners, New Hampshire, could come to life with all the limitations the author had stressed resting on the shoulders of inexperienced young players. That on a bare stage a student "stage manager" could vivify Wilder's compassionate philosophy was a question.

The most telling answer to this suspicion came from the delicate handling of Mr. Wilder's superb third act. Not a chair scraped the floor during that scene in the cemetery. Emily Webb's return to earth for her twelfth birthday was accomplished during an expectant hush which university lecturers pray for but never get. It proved two things: that Mr. Wilder's play is fine enough to live through the amateur treatment and that in its first full-length production of the season, the Cue and Curtain Club has regained a position of dignity among this city's amateur groups.

Ernest W. Payne was the all-important stage manager. He it is, you recall, who tells the story of the Gibbses, the Webbs and the other folk of Grover's Corners, leafing back into the past, flashing forward into the future with that lack of regard for time so important to the Wilder philosophy.

Nancy Morgan's Emily was quietly sustained and well projected, and with Clinton Braine as the youthful George, she brought a pleasant charm into their courtship. Betty Green and Marjories Beall were both excellent as the hard-working mothers, and Suzanne Preston's talkative Mrs. Soames was distinctly handled.

Floyd Sparks' direction followed the original for the most part, adding, however, the notion of bringing the bride and groom into the audience itself, a touch made highly logical when one considers that his stage was none too deep.

Taylor Fills House D. C. Funds Group

O'Neal, Houston and Rabaut, Democrats, Raise Total of Membership to 8

The quota of eight members of the House subcommittee on District appropriations was filled yesterday as Chairman Taylor, of the full committee, appointed three additional Democrats.

One of the new members is Representative O'Neal, of Kentucky, who refused to accept chairmanship of the subcommittee.

The other two are Representatives Houston, of Kansas, and Rabaut, of Michigan.

The subcommittee was enlarged by Taylor from five to eight members because of complaints from civic groups that the District budget does not get adequate consideration in the House. He said a membership of eight should insure a quorum being present at all hearings.

Houston to Be "Fair"

Taylor first asked for volunteers and received only one response, from Representative Lambertson (Republican), of Kansas. He then called on several members personally and sought to persuade them to serve on the committee.

Representative Houston, the only new member available after the appointments were announced, said that he hoped to be "fair and reasonable" in considering District needs and expected a "harmonious" hearing.

He said he had been mayor of a small town close to Wichita and knows something of municipal problems. Success of the city manager government at Wichita has impressed him.

Houston was a business man before entering politics and was active in the American Legion.

Caldwell Denies He'll Quit

O'Neal, who was Taylor's first choice for the chairmanship, has had considerable experience in municipal affairs at Louisville. He is an investment banker, a suave Southerner and a popular member of the House.

Rabaut is a lawyer, a graduate of Detroit University, who is serving his third term in Congress.

Representative Caldwell (Democrat), of Florida, who accepted chairmanship of the subcommittee, denied published reports that he has decided to quit Congress after this session. He said he had made no statement that he would return to the private practice of law and could not forecast what his action may be after this session.

Rep. Murdock Guest at Joint Fraternal Dinner

Representative Murdock (Democrat), the Arizona school teacher who came to Washington, was the guest of the Washington chapters of Phi Beta Kappa Fraternity and Pi Lambda Kappa Sorority at the annual joint dinner of the two associations of educators last night at the Young Women's Christian Association.

Representative Murdock, who is a member of the Alpha Zeta Chapter of Phi Delta Kappa at the University of Arizona, told his 60 hearers he found "quite a gulf between the quiet of the classroom and the turbulence of legislative halls."

Also at the speakers' table were Miss Veryl Schult, president of Pi Lambda Theta; Miss Mary Warren, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Faith Novinger, treasurer; Miss Elizabeth Middlemas, social chairman, and Miss Elizabeth Mewshaw, publicity chairman; Neil Ashby, president of Phi Delta Kappa, and Mrs. Ashby; Robert S. Anderson, vice president; Harold Crankshaw, secretary-treasurer, and Mrs. Crankshaw; Harold G. Clark, secretary to Representative Murdock, Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Murdock.

Numbers Jury Cleared in Tampering

Prosecutor Praises Woman Member for Reporting Attempt

Investigation of alleged jury tampering in a numbers trial in District Court yesterday exonerated the jurors concerned. There had been no charges against the jurors, who were questioned in an effort to solve the case.

Foreman Eugene A. Barry, 44, a real estate man, reported to Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue Thursday that a man approached Mrs. Thelma H. Geraci, juror, of 431 Sixteenth street northwest.

John J. Wilson, chief of the criminal division of the prosecutor's staff, and Assistant District Attorney William S. Tarver opened an inquiry immediately.

Wilson announced yesterday that Tarver "has interviewed the woman juror and others and has made his report to Justice O'Donoghue, who, of course, finds no reflection upon the juror, who properly reported the matter to the court."

Wilson said the matter was not closed but that action had not been determined.

Forced to Flee Against Terms of Parole, Man Freed

James (Buzz) Donovan, 36, finally was freed from a prison term he received nearly a decade ago by a decision of Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue in the District Court yesterday.

In granting a habeas corpus writ, sought for Donovan by Attorney James J. Laughlin, Justice O'Donoghue commented that the man was a victim of circumstances when he apparently violated his parole in 1934. Donovan at the time was free on his promise to stay on a farm near Flora, Ind., but the Ku Klux Klan drove him away because he was a former convict.

Donovan's next court appearance is scheduled for February 6, in the Municipal Court, where he has sued Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, for $500 for holding him more than six hours without producing a warrant. He also has pending a $50,000 suit in the District Court for false arrest.

Man Who Asked For Punishment Flees Occoquan

Walter E. Brady, 21, of the 1600 block of E street northeast, last July went to no end of trouble to have himself sent to Occoquan Workhouse for embezzlement. Last night he escaped.

Workhouse officials said Brady, who had been made a trusty, was assigned to assist William J. Rampey, engineer at the pumping plant 1½ miles away. While Rampey was engaged about his work, Brady cut the telephone line communicating with the workhouse and made off with Rampey's automobile.

Brady, in July, was sentenced to serve 360 days after pleading guilty to embezzling $46.21 from his employer, Dyer Bros., Inc., paint dealers. He had appealed to police four times to lock him up.

Scout Car Escorts for Drunks Taboo, Will Get Wagon Instead

Women Suspicious of Eerie Sounds Must Await the Patrolman's Rounds, Brown's Order to Precinct Heads Says

Inebriates who choose to relax on Washington streets no longer will have prompt police radio car service in removing them therefrom.

No longer will scout car sirens wail to the rescue of cats beleagured in trees; in the future women suspicious of eerie sounds by night may await the plodding foot patrolman. In fact, a myriad trivia which in the past have worn out scout car tires, burnt up scout car gas and taken the time of scout car personnel will in the future be handled by footmen from the precincts.

Yesterday Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, put a stop to radio calls which waste the time of police cars in an order which limited use of those vehicles to "emergencies only." The order was posted to precinct commanders.

"Radio cars are frequently sent on calls not of an emergency nature, and which could and should be taken care of by the man on the beat," Brown declared. "It is very apparent that the clerks are taking the easiest way out when a call is made to the station house. They should ascertain if it is an emergency and then act.

"The purpose of the radio cars is to have them available for emergencies, and this purpose is defeated when cars are used for work which could be performed by footmen."

Brown pointed out that a large number of messages are radioed to "call your station" or "go to your station." He said such messages take the dispatcher's time and may interfere with an important call.

"It is noted," the order stated, "that a number of calls are given scout cars for persons lying in the street, or for intoxicated persons. These calls will be answered by the patrol wagon and will only be given to radio cars when the wagon is not available. It is useless to send a scout car when, after it has responded, it would be necessary to call the wagon to move the person."

District Bridge Players Win North Virginia Women's Title

By Marian H. Barre,
The Post's Bridge Editor.

Mrs. Ralph Woodside and Mrs. Charles Kavanaugh, of Washington, yesterday afternoon captured the women's championship in the first event in the Northern Virginia Bridge Tournament now in play at the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria. They won by 14 match points, or more than a board lead over Mrs. Allan Rutherford and Mrs. Stanley Newman, of Baltimore. The winners are members of the Washington Bridge League.

Third place went to Mrs. A. J. Steinberg and Miss Thelma Goodstein who scored 183 points, only one point over Mrs. Rose Robins and Mrs. F. Samuel, in fourth place. The last honor position went to Mrs. Russell Belt and Mrs. Jack Bennett. With the exception of the runners-up all the leaders are Washington women. Mrs. J. D. Cairns and Mrs. Joseph Mowell, defending champions, finished far down the line among the 26 pairs enrolled in the event. Because of the inclement weather the women's game was smaller than in the preceding year.

With Mrs. Charles W. Boyce and Louis Hoffman defending, the mixed pair championship went into play last evening with 48 pairs in the game. Mrs. Boyce and Newman are Capital luminaries with the rank of national masters. One of the out-of-town partnerships favored to win was Mrs. Lewellyn W. Lord and Joseph Grinsfelder, of Baltimore. Grinsfelder is president of the Maryland Bridge League and captain of the foursome that will defend the team championship Sunday.

The premier event for open pairs will be played in two sessions this afternoon and evening. James H. Lemon, recently retired president of the American Contract Bridge League, and John D. Mothershed, both of Washington, are the defenders. The tournament will be concluded Sunday evening with the finals of the team match. It is run under the auspices of the American Contract Bridge League, and is a master point event. C. F. Waltman, of Reading, Pa., is directing. The official scorer is A. P. Stockvis, of the Washington Bridge League.

Cafeteria Chief Quits In Protest

'Interference' of U. S. Officials in Union Dispute Is Blamed By Reed F. Martin

Reed F. Martin, president of the Welfare and Recreational Association, operators of Government building cafeterias, has submitted his resignation in protest at the "interference of certain Government officials" in association affairs, The Post learned yesterday.

The protest, it was understood, was aimed at an action of President Roosevelt.

Martin's reference, it was stated, was to the insistence of Federal Works Administrator John M. Carmody that the association sign a contract last November with its union employes after three months of negotiation and on the eve of a threatened strike.

Order From Roosevelt

Carmody's command, it was reliably reported at that time, came on the instructions of Roosevelt that the association submit to the employes' demands, in order to prevent the strike and subsequent picketing of more than 20 Federal buildings where the cafeterias are located.

Main controversial section of the contract, submitted by the C. I. O. Cafeteria Employes Union, was a compulsory check-off provision applying to all the association's 700 employes, whether union members or not. Nonunion employes' wages, under the agreement, are to be deducted by the amount of union dues, with the proceeds going to a charitable organization chosen by the employe.

The contract, believed to be unique in trade-union history, was bitterly protested by the association's board of directors. Carmody, whose Public Buildings Administration contracts with the association for the use of the Government space, entered the controversy in a mediator's role.

Birgfeld May Take Post

Attempts were being made last night to induce Martin, chief clerk of the General Accounting Office, to withdraw his resignation. If he declines, the presidency may pass to the association's vice president, F. A. Birgfeld, chief clerk of the Treasury Department. A. J. Williams, chief clerk of the Maritime Commission, was also being discussed as a possible successor.

Meantime, it was learned that a complete auditing report by the General Accounting Office of the association's affairs was being held up pending a decision on the check-off's legality.

Following a vote at which employes were to authorize the association's disbursing officer to deduct their wages and apply the deductions either to the union or to charity, several employes declined to make a choice. The association asked the GAO to rule on whether the salaries of these workers could be deducted by the $1 per month provided by the contract.

The GAO report, it was learned, contains a thorough discussion of the legal status of the association.

Bentley Hero As Anacostia Bows, 22-20

1,000 Watch Series Battles; Red Raiders Beat Tech, 30-16, With 2d-Half Rally

By Bill Burnett.

Woodrow Wilson cage team, the "dark-horse" in the interhigh series, shadowed Anacostia for three-quarters last night at Tech gym, forging ahead in the final quarter for a 22-20 victory in one of the most exciting schoolboy battles to date.

More than 1,000 spectators, comprising the largest scholastic house of the season, saw the entertaining double bill, the first half of which was won by Western over the host school, 30-16, with a rousing second-half attack:

From soon after the opening tip-off, when long, lanky Larry Hagan ripped the cords with a mid-court field goal, until the first play of the last quarter Anacostia held a lead which varied between 2 and 5 points. Then Wilson, which wound up the third quarter on the short end of a 20-18 count, tied things up. It then scored the one basket that accounted for its opening triumph. At the same time it held the hapless Indians scoreless for the full 8-minute period.

Jordan Bentley, first-year man with the Wilsonites, was responsible for both the tying and winning points, as well as high scoring honors of the game. His 11 points were well above the record of the Indians' Johnny Placos who had eight.

The game, first in the series for Wilson and Anacostia's second defeat in two games, was marked by a time-out taken by Referee Dallas Shirley, during which a short lecture on clean play was given the perspiring participants. Less than a minute later Wilson's little Jimmy Jackson forgot his lesson, fouled Johnny Placos in a mix-up, and was summarily waved to the bench. Art Faircloth, Anacostia spark plug, also left the game in the final quarter on excessive personal fouls.

For two periods Tech appeared to have a good chance of starting its season with a victory, but Western caught on as the game progressed and it turned into a massacre. The raiders boosted a half-time 8-6 lead to 22-11 after three quarters and took things easy from there in. Responsible for the loss as much as its ineffective attack was Tech's inability to connect with its foul shots. It missed 13, made good on 8 and chose to take the ball out of bounds instead of shooting four. High scorer of the game was Jimmy Karas, pot-shot artist, who sank seven points in the Raiders' behalf.

Louis Starts Training for Godoy Fight

By the United Press

New York, Jan. 12.—Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis and Henry Armstrong, the welterweight king, started training today for title defenses at Madison Square Garden.

Louis arrived at his Pompton Lakes, N. J., camp and took light limbering exercises in preparation for his ninth crown defense against Arturo Godoy of Chile on February 9.

The Brown Bomber and his entourage came in from Detroit, by way of Baltimore where last night Louis seconded Holman Williams, Detroit welterweight, in a losing battle with Kid Cocoa of New Haven, Conn. "Every time I second a man he loses," said Joe ruefully today. "After this I'll keep out of corners, exceptin' my own."

Champion Joe, weighing 208 pounds, seemed in excellent shape and eager for battle. Questioned about possible retirement from the ring, Joe said, "what have I got to retire from?" He figures there's no one around to threaten his crown. Because of this lack of worthwhile challengers, he declared, "I hope Conn wakes up some mornin' and finds himself weighin' 195 pounds."

Joe will begin boxing tomorrow with Sparmates George Nicholson, of Yonkers, N. Y., and Clarence Brown, of Chicago. Tomorrow's sparring will be limited to three rounds. This will be increased to six rounds as he pounds through his 16 "boxing days" before the fight. He will box on Saturday, Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday.

Meanwhile Armstrong, the Los Angeles Negro, who wears the 147-pound crown, opened training at the Roxy Gymnasium, in New York, for his defense against Pedro Montanez on January 24. Hammering Henry looked like a different man from the lackadaisical lad who left here early last month to knock out Jimmy Garrison in Cleveland. He was recovering from the grippe then, and even in the Cleveland fight seemed to have lost his zing. But he had the old-time yumph today and went through his gymnasium exercises with reassuring zest. He said his last fight in St. Louis on January 4, when he knocked out Joe Ghnouly, had sharppened him up a lot. He scales 138 pounds.

Henry will begin boxing tomorrow. One of his sparmates will be Youth Arthur Dorrell, of Dallas, Tex., a fair-skinned lad, who has registered five knockouts in winning six professional fights. Armstrong's manager, Eddie Mead, who also pilots Dorrell, calls the 21-year-old Texan the "Golden Boy," who probably will succeed Armstrong as welter king when Armstrong fades or retires.

The Ball Went to Bethesda, but Eastern Took the Game

Eastern Beats Bethesda Five Easily, 34-20

Tempers ared and one player was ejected from the ball game yesterday as Eastern, ringing up its fourth triumph in a row, administered one of its worst beatings of the season to Bethesda-Chevy Chase High cage team, 34-20, on the suburban court.

Bob Custer, ace scorer of the Easterners, was the man sent to the bench by Referee Maurice Enright, but before he went out, early in the fourth period, he accounted for the high scoring performance of the game with 13 points. Franny Hughes, Bethesda's half of what was no more than a good shoving incident, distinguished himself with seven points in the loser's benalf and the roughest play of the game.

Despite the 14-point difference in the final outcome, it was a hard-fought, exciting battle. For one period Bethesda held the Tide on even terms, Eastern's 6-4 advantage after one quarter being credited to Joe Essex on a last-minute snowbird.

The second period beat Bethesda. After Hughes had opened scoring with a foul shot, Bethesda tried every way it knew but couldn't register another point for the quarter. Little Neil Craig, who replaced Essex, stood out in the Tide's hot streak with 5 of his 9 points during the game. Custer contributed four more and Eastern left the floor with a 15-5 advantage.

After that the losers made sporadic rallies, at one time coming within 7 points of the fast-flying Tide, but the outcome was never in doubt. When Custer was waved out, Moe Shulman and Essex took over and between them boosted Eastern's lead. Each scored 6 points throughout the game.

Bethesda's loss by the wide margin was mainly attributed to its failure at the foul line. In 13 attempts at single points, only six were made good. Eastern connected on 6 out of 10.

Colorful Exhibitions Mark Ft. Myer Drills

Battery C. Thrills Crowd With Maneuvers Featured at New York Show Last November; Bridleless Ride Staged by Machine-Gun Troop

By Anne Hagner

Fort Myer opened its winter series of Friday exhibition drills at the nearby Army post yesterday with the most colorful of military ceremony. The ride was in honor of Maj. Gen. James K. Parsons, commander of the Third Corps area, and was adequate proof that the way to get a full house is to make the entertainment free.

Outstanding on the program was the battery drill staged by Battery C of the Sixteenth Field Artillery, commanded by Capt. Robert L. Taylor. Doing the same maneuvers that were featured attractions at Madison Square Garden's National Horse Show in November, the brilliant grays got a big hand on their home grounds in spite of several minor accidents that turned up during the activities.

Other high points were the bridleless ride put on by the machine gun troop of the Third Cavalry, in which 20 enlisted men went through an intricate drill without benefit of bridles; and a jumping exhibition by enlisted men of Headquarters Troop, Third Cavalry, that involved taking fences with and without saddles, bridles, eyesight and the use of the arms, any one of which would be a tough assignment. The boys apparently thought so, too, for several bit the dust during the course of the ride, but nobody was hurt.

Dukes Swamp Card Courtmen By 60-32 Score

Pittsburgh, Jan. 12.—The Flying Cardinals of Catholic University were badly outclassed tonight by Duquesne's Dukes, who romped off with their sixth basketball success in seven starts by a convincing 60-to-32 margin.

Eddie Milkovich flipped in the first basket shortly after the opening whistle and the Dukes never were headed. They led, 22 to 12, at half-time.

Hockey League Moves to Curb Rough Players

Acting to curb the increasing roughness of Eastern Amateur League hockey, the loop's secretary, P. E. M. Thompson, yesterday served notice on all clubs that in the future unsportsmanlike conduct will be costly to the guilty player.

In a letter sent out to each of the five Eastern Amateur League teams, Thompson said the referee had official instructions, effective last night, to bar from a game any player receiving two majors or two misconducts. Moreover, according to Thompson, such a player shall be suspended until the league board has ruled on his case.

Said Thompson, who is connected with the Atlantic City Sea Gulls, "a game in Atlantic City was seriously impeded by the spectators throwing things on the ice and the referees are notified today that in such cases the home team shall be penalized by having a face-off in front of its own net.

". . . the number of major penalties and misconduct penalties for individual players is becoming rather large and unless something is done about it, there is quite a risk of injury. We, in Atlantic City have let one of our best players, George Agar, go because of his conduct and believe it might be to the benefit of the league if the rest of the players were notified to this effect."

"The referees are being advised today that anyone who receives a major penalty or a misconduct player in excess of two majors or two misconducts shall be barred from the game and will not be permitted to play again until the league takes up the matter."

Keen Battle Witnessed by 2,500 Fans

Dewey's Shot Sends Revised D. C. Team To Front; Courteau, Davies Also Score

By Jack Munhall.

Throwing up an air-tight defense to protect an early lead, the Washington Eagles continued to close up ground on the Rovers in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League race last night by upsetting McIntyre Miners, 3-2, before 2,500 fans at Riverside Stadium.

The victory, Washington's first of the season over a Canadian team, left the locals only 2 points behind the pace-setting Rovers whom they can tie by defeating the last place golfers in River Vale tonight.

Despite the absence of the flashing and high-scoring Alan Kuntz, Washington popped up with one of its best performances to completely outplay the favored visitors who are atop the Northern Ontario Hockey Association, one of Canada's fastest amateur loops.

With Kuntz sidelined by the broken wrist he suffered Tuesday night in a game against the Orioles, Redver Mackenzie started a revised line-up, with Roy Covert at center and Ross Knipfel and Hal Dewey at wings. Knipfel was making his debut as a wing, shifting over from defense, but he failed to show marked ability at his new position and likely he will go back to defense where he has been impressive.

Dewey Scores Point

Dewey, who is leading the league in number of goals scored, although he trails New York's Al Collings in points, added to his total by scoring the Eagles' second goal. This point, coming late in the second period, gave Washington a 2-to-1 advantage, which was retained.

The Miners scored once in the second period and once in the third, but their second point was made after the Eagles had boosted their margin to 3-to-1 on a shot by Big Bill Davies.

If nothing else, last night's game proved that ice hockey to be interesting and crowd exciting does not have to be rowdy. The Miners were big and aggressive, but they played cleanly most of the time and the Eagles gladly reciprocated. As a result, the fast match was marred by only two penalties, both minor and inflicted one against each team.

Both goalies turned in superlative games, Gordon Lee, for the Eagles, and Hal Gordon, for the Miners. Gordon impressed observers as being one of the outstanding goal tenders to appear here.

Eagles Take Lead

Smart, aggressive play earned the Eagles a 2-1 advantage in a fast, but exceptionally clean, first period. There was no score until 15:24, when a fine play by Courteau set up Washington's first count. Skating down the center of the ice, Courteau crashed into Milen and Bowman, McIntyre defensemen, jarring them both while he slid the puck to Teammate Germann. Germann, expecting the pass, took it near the net and it was no task to beat Goalie Gordon.

The Miners, speeding up their attack, tied the count at 17:38, on a lightning-fast play, Cooper to Lorraine. Cooper's pass, though deflected slightly by the legs of a Washington player, was perfect and a quick push of Lorraine's stick was all that was needed.

Ramsay was the hero of the second Eagles' point, blocking out Milen to allow Dewey to ram in long and angled sizzler off passes from Covert and Burrage. Burrage started the scoring play by intercepting an enemy pass in the center zone.

The Eagles scored shortly before the end of the second period to increase their lead to 3-1 over the visitors who seemed a bit faster

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Don't be too harsh with the nag who cost you a two buck bet, and have a care how you berate the jockey for what might appear to be a poor ride. Perhaps your two dollars were skating all over the track on a set of ill-fitting plates your steed had nailed to his hooves.

POVICH

The man who shod Challedon has seen the turf champion run a half-dozen times but he can't tell you what colors the jockey wore. He had no eyes for anything on Challedon's back. He was concerned with something more important: Challedon's feet. The manner in which Challedon was able to pick them up and lay them down won or lost races, Mr. A. S. Dodd knew

In his quaint little shop at Laurel, Md., and at major tracks around the country, Mr. Dodd has shod many of the great and near-great of the turf. It is no profession for the faint-hearted, according to Mr. Dodd. Coming to grips with a highstrung animal that doesn't want to be shod has its exciting moments, and his thick leather apron has absorbed many a blow that might have felled an ox.

Plating Thoroughbreds Is a Delicate Job

Intriguing pictures of Mr. Dodd at work will appear in tomorrow's Rotogravure section of The Post. He doesn't have the biceps of the proverbial village smithy, but he doesn't need them. Thoroughbred plating is on the delicate side. The smithy worked with docile old farm plugs, mostly. He didn't have to contend with highstrung, inbred thoroughbred horseflesh that ofttimes doesn't have sense enough to come in out of the rain, or the equine equivalent.

"Fitting the plate to the horse is only half of our job," Mr. Dodd was saying. "We also have to fit it to the track. The plates you may have put on this morning may be useless to the horse in the afternoon if the track turns muddy. Then it requires stickers or mud caulks on the hing legs and sharp heels on the outside to keep the leg from sliding forward when the horse is in stride.

"Racing officials are making much of saliva tests if they don't like the way a horse runs, but it's no trick to get a horse beaten. The wrong kind of shoes will lick a horse more thoroughly than 20 pounds more weight on his back."

One iron shoe of the type worn by a dray horse will outweigh an entire set of plates of a thoroughbred racer, Dodd reveals. The dainty equine footwear demanded on the race tracks is fashioned from select steel alloyed with about 47 per cent carbon. The heaviest shoe will weigh no more than 4 ounces and a set lasts the average racer only 20 days.

Challedon Is 'Perfect' Horse on Track and Off

It was no surprise to Horseshoer Dodd that Challedon became a great race horse. He had the perfect foot, to hear the plater tell it, and his good manners on the track were reflected in his docile action in the smith's stall. "He'd stand like a big kitten and sometimes fall asleep while I was shoeing him.

"I couldn't say that, though about the Man o' War breed. They all reminded me of 2-year-old fillies. It is a job to get plates on any Man 'o War thing. They want to kick a plater's brains out. Some horses just don't have good sense. The worst actor among the high-class horses I've shod, though, probably was Jim Healy's Spot Cash. It was a job to get close to him."

For his No. 1 renegade, though, Dodd selects an old plater named Tie Pin which was racing in 1916. The plater's average pay is $6 per set, but Dodd would never attempt to shoe Tie Pin for less than $50. He says the risk wasn't worth it and the owner, who knew his horse, paid willingly.

"They finally took Tie Pin to Cuba one winter and I wasn't surprised about the story I heard about him. Those Cuban platers couldn't get to first base with him at the track and moved the horse to the veterinarian hospital to shoe him. They figured to put him on a tilting table, strap him down, give him an anesthetic and then go to work on him. They got him on the table all right, but that ended their success. He broke loose and they tell me he made shambles of that hospital.

They Never Want to See Another Harmonique

"And if another horse like J. K. L. Ross' old Harmonique never comes along it will be all right with every plater in the country. That old fellow would bite and kick but he had another pet trick. He'd lunge and try to crush the plater against the wall. We finally had to put two men on him with twitches and stretch an iron chain across his upper gums. But we had to blindfold him first."

Woe to the plater who happens accidently to wound a horse by pricking him with one of the eight nails each plate requires. At least Mr. Dodd says it is then that the plater has a task on his hands. The thoroughbred at best is a highstrung beast and they never forget pain.

Once in a great while, the plater encounters a nag with mismatched feet. "But it isn't the fault of the horse or his breeding," says Mr. Dodd. "It's a germ that we call 'the thrush' and it causes the hoof to contract. If it attacks only one hoof, then you have a horse with mismatched feet and you have to shoe him accordingly."

Pair Post 36-Hole Scores of 138 to Pace Field In $5,000 Event; Rut Coffey Qualifies With A 150; Cliff Spencer Fails to Make Grade

By the Associated Press

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 12.—Golf bigwigs, minor leaguers and others touring the winter tournament trail wrote the second chapter today of the 72-hole $5,000 medal play Oakland Open championship. More conclusively than anything else, it proved that by and large, the bulk of them are better bad weather than fair weather players.

Tied for leadership at the half-way mark with 36-hole totals of 138 were Jim Demaret, the crooning Texan from Houston, and husky Craig Wood, veteran trouper from Mamaroneck, N. Y.

The second round was played under clear skies, sunshine and a drying course. Only three of the field were able to come in under the par figures of the 35-35—70 Sequoyah course—Lloyd Mangrum, Chicago; John Dawson, Hollywood amateur, and Jimmy Hines, Great Neck, Long Island. Each posted 69 and none was among the front runners.

Hatfields and McCoys Resume Feud, the Latter Winning, 17-12

By the Associated Press

Matewan, W. Va., Jan. 12.—The McCoys and the Hatfields, who in other years wouldn't stay on the same mountain with each other—much less in the same building—unless bent on mayhem, played a basketball game tonight which the McCoys won, 17-12.

In a rough and tumble affair singularly free of any apparent ill feeling, such as characterized relationships between the two families in their feudin' days in this Southern section of West Virginia, and across the border in Kentucky, it was nip and tuck all the way.

At the end of the first quarter, the score was 4-4; at the half, 7-7, and the crowd of several hundred which attended the ruckus in the Matewan High School gymnasium whooped and hollered themselves hoarse.

But two minutes from the end of the game, the McCoys, leading, 13-12, by virtue of a free throw, cut loose, Robert and Jim, brothers, each scoring a field goal to put the contest on ice.

John, another brother of Robert and Jim McCoy, also broke into the lineup, and brothers Paul and Capt. Glenn carried the fight for the Hatfields.

Duke Boxers, Spider Five On Twin Bill

Undefeated Terps Meet Richmond U. At 8 o'Clock at College Park Gym

The University of Maryland's surprisingly fine basketball team, regarded as a real contender for the Southern Conference title since its defeat of Duke, will meet a severe test tonight in half of an attractive sports twin bill at College Park.

Undefeated in two conference games, the Terp courtmen will tackle Richmond University, unbeaten all season, at 8 o'clock to open a program which will be finished with boxing between Maryland and Duke.

Maryland appears to have the better balanced boxing squad, and Richmond the better basketball team. Hence the hosts will be very well pleased if they sweep the bargain bill.

Boast Three Veterans

Three lettermen, one of them a defending Southern Conference titleholder, form the nucleus for the Terrapin mitten squad. Bob Bradley, at 127 pounds; Nathan Askin, at 135 pounds, and conference 165-pound champion, Newton Cox, are expected to win many victories for Maryland this season. This trio also seems to swing the edge to Maryland over Duke. The Blue Devils, like Maryland, are shy experienced material and have only two 1938-39 lettermen. They are Capt. Faison Jordan, 127 pounds, and Ed Morel, 155-pounder.

Feature fight of the dual meet should be the clash of Bradley and Capt. Jordan. These clever, shifty little boys fought a sizzling draw in their match last year and naturally each will be out to demonstrate his superiority tonight.

Newcomers in Action

With the exception of Bradley, Askin and Cox, Maryland's boxers will be making their first varsity appearance, while Duke's new talent has the experience of an opening match with powerful South Carolina to their credit. The Blue Devils, though beaten, 5-3, offered stiff resistance to the Gamecocks.

Maryland defeated Duke last year, 5-3, and the Old Line and Spider basketball teams broke even in two games, the Terps losing a regular season contest at Richmond, 41-34, and avenging that defeat by eliminating the Spiders in the second round of the Southern Conference tournament at Raleigh.

Phils Cancel Deal For Kracher and Troy

Philadelphia, Jan. 12 (AP).—The Phillies canceled today two deals that sent Catcher Joe Kracher to Baltimore of the International League on option and Outfielder Gordon Troy to Chattanooga of the Southern Association, on outright release.

President Gerry Nugent said the deals were canceled on order of Kenesaw Landis, baseball commissioner. Nugent said Landis ruled that Kracher and Troy must be given a fair trial. Both will go to the Phils spring training camp at Miami Beach, Fla.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 12.—Jack Dempsey and Jack Kearns have been on speaking terms for 15 years, but all the words were harsh. The greatest combination in sports history broke up in 1925, over La Belle Taylor. But now, after all that time and all that indignation, they are together again—older, wiser, mellow.

CONSIDINE

Tomorrow they'll pose with their arms around each other's shoulders at Dempsey's pub, where Kearns will toss one of the old time parties . . . champagne. The occasion will be the signing of a fight between Bob Pastor and Red Burman, to be committed in Detroit, where Kearns is promoting.

But more than these two pugs is bringing Dempsey and Kearns together again. It started a few weeks ago when Dempsey wired Kearns from San Francisco. The wire ran something like this:

Kearns wired back that he'd see Dempsey in New York. We were with the good Gray Doctor just before he met the Mauler, at the New York boxing writers' banquet. He had seen the Dempsey-Willard picture—a shocker—and he was full of memories and a little nervous about meeting up again with the man for whom he did so much, and who did so much for him.

Man's Yen for 'Dough' Cause of It All

So dough, and mankind's incorrigible yen for it, is bringing them together again, just as it brought them together 25 years ago, when Dempsey was a broken-nosed bindle-stiff in need of a fight, and Kearns a fast-talking, quick-thinking fellow who had gone into the boxing game after recovering from the spell of the Yukon.

"Funny thing how those Dempsey-Willard pictures have clicked, after all these years," Kearns mused. "I remember how the deal was made. Frank Hall, one of those movie fellows, came to us in Toledo not long before the fight. The three of us, him and Tex and me, talked it over and arranged a deal. We were to split it up into thirds, and we didn't pay much attention to it. Y'see, there was a law against transporting fight pictures over a State line. They had put it through after the Johnson-Jeffries fight. So we were only figuring on showing them in Ohio.

"Well, Hall took the pictures and I got to figuring that they might do us more good than we had expected. Willard had a small piece of them—I think it was in Rickard's share—and he was so sick over losing the fight he didn't even want to have anything to do with the pictures. So Dempsey and I bought him and Rickard out, made a new deal with Hall, and decided to go 50-50 with him.

Mabel Raised Cain and Jack Paid

"But there wasn't much we could do with them. I think we probably must have tried getting them out of the State, because I remember Mabel Walker Willibrandt—she was something big in the Department of Justice then—raised cain. They were bootlegged in a few places and I remember paying a couple fines on them, when they were stopped.

"After a while we forgot them. We were making a lot of dough, fights, exhibitions, movies, vaudeville—you know how it rolled in. The pictures got stuck away in some vault, and along about 10 years after the fight Hall died. I think that makes Jack and me sole owners, don't you?"

Like nearly everyone else, Kearns is convinced that the Dempsey of July 4, 1919, would have belted out Joe Louis in a round or two. But he points out one thing that has been overlooked.

"If you could stage something like that, Louis, of course, could have fought the way Dempsey did. I mean there are 10 times as many restrictions placed on Louis today—by modern boxing rules—than there were on Dempsey. The Dempsey of the Willard fight would be disqualified today. The rules that day let him hit on the break, didn't make him go to neutral corners when Willard was down, let him stand over Willard and hit him as he got up, or get around in back of him and slug him. The rabbit punch was okay. Everything went."

Every Man for Himself—Jess Forgot

Someone asked Kearns if Willard had agreed to all this, before the fight. And Kearns said, "Yes . . . Y'see, in those days fighters agreed on just how much leeway they'd take—when they signed for the fight. We had convinced Willard that Dempsey was a terrible palooka and when it came time to sign for the fight he said it would be all right for the fight to be conducted on the "protect yourself" line of rules.

"Protect yourself rules," the Good Gray Doctor repeated, with a mirthless chuckle, thinking of the revolting sight of Willard, after Big Jess had tragically overlooked that very provision.

Long Island Five Routs Aggies, 57-31

New York, Jan. 12 (AP).—Long Island University's basketball team, winner of 44 of its previous 45 games, really swung into high tonight and smothered the New Mexico Aggies, 57 to 31, in the second game of Madison Square Garden's collegiate double-header.

After St. John's had overpowered Temple, 43 to 28, in the opener, 15,684 fans saw the Blackbirds take a 7-0 lead in the first five minutes, apply the pressure to pull away, 32 to 13, at the half and then hold the Southwestern cowhands to three free throws during the first 11 minutes of the final session.

Texans Plan Big Welcome For Kimbrough

Prominent Texans are planning a rousing welcome for John Kimbrough, Texas A. & M. All-American fullback and star of his team's Sugar Bowl victory, when he comes here for the sixth annual Touchdown Club dinner at 8 o'clock Tuesday night at the Willard.

Senator Tom Connally and Majority Leader Sam Rayburn, of the House of Representatives, reportedly are among the spirited Texans who plan a reception for Kimbrough that will overshadow that which Iowans are planning to give Eddie Anderson and Nile Kinnick, who are to be here for the same occasion.

It was announced yesterday that Joe McFadden, Georgetown's junior quarterback, has been selected by his teammates as the Hoyas "most valuable" of 1939. McFadden will receive together with one player each from George Washington, Catholic University, American University and Maryland a trophy donated by George Marshall and the Washington Redskins.

The other players selected were Murphy Booth, G. W. blocking back; Pete Sachon, C. U. quarterback; George Brown, American U tackle and end, and Ralph Albarano, Maryland tackle.

Georgetown Leads 16-0 at Halftime; O'Grady, Pajak Star; 3d Loss to Pa. Foes

By the Associated Press

Scranton, Pa., Jan. 12.—Coming from behind with a rush in the closing minutes, the University of Scranton Tomcats nosed out Georgetown, 33 to 31, here tonight.

Bob Pawling's sixth field goal and Les Dickman's third two-pointer gave the Tomcats their sixth win in ten starts. It was the Hoyas' third setback in as many invasions of Pennsylvania. Previously they lost to Temple at Philadelphia and to Penn State at State College.

The Tommies came to life in the second half, however, and with Pawling and Dickman showing the way pulled up to within 2 points at 31-29.

Youngblood Rollers Take 1st at Takoma

'Dutch' Sherbahn Leads Suburbanites With Set of 400

"Dutch" Sherbahn's Youngblood Hardware team moved into first place in the Takoma Duckpin League last night by winning three games from Dome Oil Co. at Takoma Alleys. The loss dropped the Dome Oil team into second place, two games behind Youngblood.

Charlie Williams rolled a 374 set, while Sherbahn had the high set of the evening of 400. The pair split high game honors with 1,516. The Hardwaremen rolled a high set of 1,791. In other games, Takoma Funeral Home won three from Stevens Decorating, Takoma Billiards beat Takoma Motor Co. three games, and Americans beat High's Ice Plant two games.

ARCADIA

In the Ladies' Independent League Mamie Payne, of Merlo Kidwell Senators, had a high individual game of 136. Betty Dugan (Joe High, Inc.) and Anna Daut (Fleishman's Yeast) had high sets of 338. Galliher-Huguley was high in team game with 529 and Harrington Tavern and Galliher-Huguely tied for team set honors with 1,500.

LUCKY STRIKE

Two new season records were stamped on the books in the Ladies I. D. R. A. League. Dorothy Lee, of Finance and Accounts, accounted for both with a high game of 124 and high set of 344. The two fine efforts helped Dorothy's team to game and set honors of the night, 446 and 1,271.

A tie for individual game honors resulted in the PWA Recreation Ladies League when Mellie Hobbs and Mellie Lebford each rolled 124. The first, however, went home with high set of the night, 315, which played a large part in Mail and File Blues' two-game victory over Miscellaneous.

Navy Yard League individual honors went to William Goff and Ray McConnell, with 149 and 389, respectively. Goff rolled for Optical No. 2 and McConnell for F. and A. No. 3.

The leading Indian Spring No. 1 team held possession of first place in the Country Club League despite a three-game loss to Capitol No. 2, last place quintet in the league. Capitol No. 1, in second place, also was the victim of the night when it was edged out, 2-1, by Congressional. Top honors of the session sent to Kenwood's Tom Powers, 142, and Manor's Dallas Pratt, 381.

Football Handicaps Education—Hutchins

Tells Chicago U. Only a College With A Winner Benefits

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 12.—President Robert Maynard Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, declared today that "football on the whole has been a major handicap to education in the United States."

Giving some 2,000 members of the student body an explanation of why Chicago recently abandoned the sport, Dr. Hutchins emphasized his opinions that: (1) It is a good thing for the Nation to have one important university discontinue football, (2), that football benefits a school only if it is winning football, and (3), that football has done as much as any single thing to originate, disseminate and confirm misconceptions of what a university is.

Greeted by Applause

Greeted by hearty applause as he appeared on the stage of Mandel Hall, the young educator reminded his audience that they recently had voted, in a student poll, for subsidization of football players. Emphasizing the point Chicago would never come to subsidization, Dr. Hutchins said:

"In short, the only kind of football you wanted was a kind in which the University could not engage. It, therefore, determined to give it up. What are the results? In the first place, I think it is a good thing for the country to have one important university discontinue football.

"If you win, you must keep on winning. The president of a State university which had championship teams, once told me that if the football team ever lost his appropriations would be cut in half."

Popular Misconceptions

In an address free from any sign of heckling, Dr. Hutchins said the greatest obstacle to the development of a university are the two most popular misconceptions of what a university is—a kindergarten and a country club.

"By getting rid of football, by presenting the spectacle of a university that can be great without football, Chicago may perform a signal service to higher education throughout the land," he said.

Dr. Hutchins, chief executive of an institution which contributed many brilliant pages to the history of collegiate football and which only yesterday saw its "Coach-Without-a-Team" Clark Shaughnessy, agree to teach the sport at Stanford, said the proper function of a school is to "emphasize education and not athletics and social life."

Landon Five Beaten, 24-18, At Baltimore

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Jan. 12.—Despite an impressive last-quarter rally which netted 13 points, Landon School of Washington bowed to Baltimore Friends' five here today, 24-18.

The local quintet finished the half ahead, 11-5, and increased the advantage to 19-5 in the third quarter as Tarbert made good five free throws in as many tries.

Union Five Beats Howard by 75-45

Richmond, Va., Jan. 12.—Howard University basketers, of Washington, ended their game with Union here tonight on the short end of a 75-45 score, as the winners' Campbell checked in a 25-point scoring performance. High scorer for the District contingent was Capt. Parker, who tallied 15 points.

Playing their second game in as many nights, Howard men were never able to furnish a serious threat to the home club. Last night the Bisons met Virginia State in one of the roughest and most bruising games of the season. The strain of the tough clash was still visible tonight.

Roosevelt Cagers Beat Martinsburg

Perlo, Travis and West Lead Attack for Riders; 2d Victory of Week

Special Dispatch to The Post

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 12.—A polished Roosevelt High cage team, of Washington, balanced by Hymie Perlo, curly haired guard, outclassed Martinsburg High School here tonight to capture its second victory of the week, 36-18.

The visiting District of Columbia quint, this year aspiring to the Washington city title, started off slow, but the Perlo-to-Travis-to-West combination started clicking midway of the second quarter and piled up a wide advantage rapidly from there on to the end of the contest.

With Perlo paving the way with beautiful offensive work and Travis and West performing brilliantly under the basket, the Washingtonians held a 12-6 lead at half time after being out in front, 4-3, at the end of the first stanza.

From the start of the second half, however, it was Roosevelt all the way. West worked valiantly under the basket to collect four goals and sink a pair of foul shots in the last two periods; Travis, Roosevelt center, was good for a trio of twin pointers, and Perlo calmly reared back on his heels to sink three shots from midfloor.

Martinsburg tried desperately to overcome the advantage held by the visitors in the final period, but connected only with several long tosses from midcourt. Laidlow and Edwards were the chief point getters for Martinsburg, with six apiece, while West topped every performer with 12.

It was Martinburg's first loss of the 1940 season.

Miami Opens Cardinals' Ring Slate

Hurricanes Offer An Unusually Fine Team as Opening Foe For District Squad

Facing one of the strongest opening foes in history, Catholic University's boxing team opens its sixteenth season when it opposes Miami University at the C. U. gym at 8:30 tonight.

This is the first ring meeting between the two schools and the Hurricanes, who have been making great strides in boxing, see a chance for national recognition by whipping the Cardinals. C. U. became a power in college boxing since Cardinals carried off two national titles in successive years.

Miami has been pointing for this match ever since October, when C. U. invaded Coral Gables for the annual football game. At that time, when the match was closed, Bill Regan, Miami coach, frankly told Dutch Bergman, director of athletics at C. U., that the Hurricanes had a powerful team and were eager to meet the best mitt squads in the country.

Beat Clemson

The Southerners are living up to their plans. En route they beat Clemson, 4½ to 3½. Miami went through a light workout yesterday and not one of the team had any scars from the Clemson tilt. The Southerners looked fast and rugged and handled themselves well.

Coach Eddie LaFond is pessimistic about the Cardinals' chances in the lighter divisions. With the exception of Lenny Bartone in the 127-pound class, every man under 155 pounds will be a rookie.

It is in the four heavier divisions that C. U. expects to pile up its points. Every one of the bouts deserves the "star" rating, but the highlights of the evening is expected to be provided by the heavyweight between the Cardinal kayo king, Jay Turner, and Miami's Tom Kearns. Turner is moving up a class because of the absence of Julius Stanges and the tremendous amount of weight he will be giving away may hurt C. U.'s chances.

Spots Foe 55 Pounds

Turner weighed in at 180 pounds after yesterday's drill which means he'll be spotting Kearns 56 pounds. But Jay has taken good care of himself against heavyweights before and Cardinal supporters are unworried. If Turner can tag Kearns once, that's all he'll need, according to the local fans.

No less exciting will be the bouts between Joe Bunsa and Joe Bonano; Gerry Strang and Bud Stern, and Fred Stant and Red Cameron. Bunsa, C. U. captain, has been punching with terrific power but he'll be meeting a fast, elusive target in Bonano who has a reputation as a boxer.

Wilson's Teachers Tackle Blue Ridge Five Here Tonight

Wilson Teachers College, smallest of the local intercollegiate family, goes after its second win of the season tonight when it faces Blue Ridge College in the Wilson gym at 8 p. m. The game will be preceded by a preliminary contest between the undefeated Wilson jayvees and Damascus High, which will get under way at 7 o'clock.

The Teachers opened their season with a victory over Gallaudet but followed this with a 1-point loss to Johns Hopkins at Baltimore. Coach Doc White is eager to get his boys back in winning stride and considering the fact that Gallaudet defeated Blue Ridge, figures the Teachers to be more than an even bet.

Red Dock Begins 1940 Campaign With Victory at Hialeah

Greentree's Horses Win Two Events

Town Boy Second, Titilator Is Third In Featured Sprint; Miss Frances Wins

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 12.—The famous Greentree stable of Mrs. Payne Whitney flashed into the spotlight here today after having failed to win a race this winter. The New York establishment sent three horses to the post and won with two of them. Tipcat accounted for the second event, then, in the featured Biscayne Bay Purse—sixth on the card—Red Dock began his 1940 campaign with a victory to give his stable and Jockey Eddie Arcaro a double. The latter, leading pilot at Tropical Park, also is on top here to date.

Red Dock led six other 3-year-olds virtually from the start. He reported a length before J. E. Widener's Town Boy, while the latter beat H. P. Headley's Titilator, the favorite, by three lengths for the place. Red Dock, paying $5.70, stepped the 6½ furlongs in 1:17 3-5.

All in the field except Office Hour and Royal Man are eligible for the $20,000 Flamingo Stakes, to be run late in February.

As in his last race, when he finished second to the speedy Little Risk, Titilator was slow to get started while racing on the inside. He made a menacing move around the bend, only to flatten out in the stretch. Red Dock raced Royal Man and then Picture Play into defeat before staving off the closing bid of Town Boy.

Miss Frances Winner

The usual "baby" race of three furlongs down the straightaway ushered in the program. J. O. Keene's Miss Frances, a filly with a reputation for speed before she even began her racing career, made her initial start a winning one, as expected. Don Meade, who won the juvenile dash the previous day, again was on the "good thing." Miss Frances, a 4 to 5 shot, dashed to the front just after a good start and held her field safe to the end, clicking by a length in :34 2-5.

Double Call easily outran the others and finished second by five lengths. Royal Imp barely lasted, to nose out Stork for the show.

Prompt Pay Scores

Herbert M. Woolf uncovered a promising new colt in the third race of 6 furlongs, for maiden 3-year-olds. Prompt Pay, a son of Insco, sported the maroon and white colors and was backed down to 2-to-1 favoritism. The colt, an eligible for the $20,000 added Flamingo Stakes, raced well up from the start, gained command in the stretch and moved away to register by a length and a half in 1:11 3-5. Dodger beat Unravelled by three lengths for runner-up honors.

Jockey Berger Draws A 15-Day Suspension

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 12 (AP).—Jockey M. Berger was suspended 15 days, January 15 to January 31, inclusive, for holding to the saddle cloth of the colt, Lucky Major, during the running of the first race today, by order of the stewards. Berger rode Uncle Jimmie. Neither colt finished in the money.

MISS FRANCES, quick to settle into her stride, assumed command in the opening furlong, responded with determination to pressure through the stretch and won going clear. DOUBLE CALL broke alertly, went in close attendance of the pace, but could not get up. ROYAL IMP, off fast, raced straight aliens the inner rail and outlasted STORK. The latter was in tight quarters at the end.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TIPCAT, $9.20, $5.50, $3.50; DAMAGED GOODS, $8.70, $3.90; HIGHOLA, $3.00.

TIPCAT, away alertly, forced a steady pace from the start, shook off TURBIE entering the stretch, continued courageously under a very strong ride and outlasted DAMAGED GOODS. The latter, going well up under little restraint, made a bold effort through the stretch, but just failed to wear the winner down. HIGHOLA slipped through on the inside entering the stretch, moved up strongly, but faltered when the real test came. BOSS HOSS dropped back entering the stretch, but came again to dead heat PAIR OF DICE for fourth place.

Daily Double, MISS FRANCES and TIPCAT, Paid $18.70

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For maiden 3-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 3:06½. Off 3:07. Winner, Woolford Farm's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PROMPT PAY, $6.00, $3.50, $3.30; DODGER, $3.50, $3.00; UNRAVELLED, $4.60.

PROMPT PAY, eased off the early pace, swung around the leaders entering the stretch and shook off DODGER after a mild drive to win handily. DODGER began fast, raced KILTA VERSE into defeat, assumed command when straightened into the stretch, but was poorly handled when it came to a drive. UNRAVELLED worked his way up steadily and finished with a rush. NOODLES saved ground and had no excuses.

FOURTH RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won cleverly; place driving. Went to post 3:37. Off 3:37. Winner, T. B. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ZELKOVA, $7.50, $4.00, $3.30; DANDY GAL, $3.40, $3.00; WELDING, $4.70.

ZELKOVA, showing keen speed, set a fast pace in the early stages, drew out when straightened into the stretch held DANDY GAL safe at the end. DANDY GAL, reserved off the leaders until midway around the turn, began to improve her position on the inside and was full of WELDING down in the final 70 yards. CANTATA, vigorously ridden, was unable to better position.

FIFTH RACE—Seven furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:07. Off 4:08. Winner, F. C. Murray's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAECHANCE, $20.70, $9.50, $5.70; SWING BAND, $5.80, $3.80; HASTE ON, $4.00.

MAECHANCE, going in his best form, assumed command in the stretch turn, then steadied in front, won with something in reserve. SWING BAND suffered minor interference leaving the backstretch, saved ground in the last quarter mile and finished gamely to outlast HASTE ON. The latter, prominent all the way, hung slightly in the final drive. COLUMBIA'S BOY was unable to better his position.

SIXTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000. The Biscayne Bay. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:36½. Off 4:36½. RED DOCK, setting a fast pace throughout, opened up a commanding lead turning into the stretch, but faltered and was under extreme pressure in the final furlong. Eventually holding TOWN BOY safe, rallied off the pace in the opening half mile, saved ground thereafter and, closing gamely, was slowly gaining at the finish. TITILATOR, slow to get going, came around his opposition rounding the turn and easily disposed of the others. PICTURE PLAY moved up fast leaving the backstretch, but stopped when straightened into the stretch.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:07. Off 5:07. Winner, Lemar Stock Farm's ch. c. MUMBLE followed the pace closely under light restraint until straightened into the stretch, closed with determination under pressure and won going away. PANJAB, sluggish for 7 furlongs, gained fast between the leaders through the stretch when placed under punishment and wore YELLOW DUST down. The latter showed the most speed, but faltered when the real test came. WHITE HOPE, well ridden, moved up stoutly entering the stretch, but hung in the final drive.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles (on the turf). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 5:38. Off 5:38½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—GREEN MELON, $8.00, $3.90, $3.10; LOW CUTS, $5.30, $3.40; CAMPO FALSO (entry), $2.80.

GREEN MELON, favoring the course, held his opposition safe for speed and, rated in front while saving ground, always held LOW CUTS safe. The latter, going in nearest pursuit of the winner all the way, finished with good courage, but was no match for the winner. CAMPO FALSO slipped through on the inside in the run down the backstretch, finished gamely to punishment and outstayed BLACKMAIL. The latter was going strong at the end.

Three-Horse Finish in Second Race at Hialeah Park

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Mrs. Payne Whitney's Greentree Stable provided the winner of yesterday's second race at Hialeah Park when Tipcoat (6) won by a head over Damaged Goods (8). Highola, against the rail, looks like the winner, but photo was taken from angle a few lengths before the finish. Highola was third, a head back of Damaged Goods

Woodward's Five Annexes 3d Straight

Its third straight victory of the season was credited to Woodward School cagers yesterday when they invaded Friends School gym and went home with a 22-14 decision. It was the first game of the season for the Friends club.

Though Forward Kelley tallied 11 points to lead Woodward to victory, Friends' crack point-maker, Alvin Newmyer, with Bill Noyes dogging his every step, was able to get only 1 point. Jones compiled the best record for Friends with 5 points.

Woodward's victory resulted from a scoring streak in the third quarter. At the half it was but 4 points ahead, 13-9, but gradually drew away in the next session.

Wheat Slump Carries Prices Below Dollar

Chicago, Jan. 12 (AP).—The wheat price slump which has been in progress for about two weeks was extended today as the market tumbled 2 cents a bushel before rallying to erase half of the loss.

Dollar quotations were wiped off blackboards for the first time in almost a month and closing prices were 9 to 11 cents below the two-year peaks established December 19.

Selling came from all types of traders. There was a mixture of stop loss liquidation and closing out of lines needing additional margin. Weakness of securities also was a factor along with forecast of additional moisture in the winter wheat belt.

Buying of cash dealers and short covering contributed to a recovery of about 1 cent from the day's lows but wheat closed ½ to ¼ lower than yesterday; May, 98¾ to 98⅞; July, 96½ to 96⅝. Corn lost ⅛ to ½; May, 57¼ to 57⅜; July, 57⅝ to 57¾; Oats, ¼ to ½; rye, ⅞ to 2⅜, and lard, 3 to 10 cents.

Britain Buys All Canada's Surplus Metals

Exportable Lead, Copper, Aluminum Are Bought by Government

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 12.—Britain has purchased Canada's entire exportable surplus of aluminum and has an agent in Canada "who is making an arrangement to expand production there," Col. J. J. Llewellin, parliamentary secretary to the ministry of supply, disclosed today.

In addition to taking the exportable surplus of Canada's lead and copper, the ministry of supply also has bought immense quantities of British Columbia lumber.

"We have more wood purchased in British Columbia than we have ships to carry it," Col. Llewellin said, adding that the question of shipping was a big problem in connection with moving this timber. Through the cooperation of Sir John Gilmour, minister of shipping, some tonnage was being assigned to this task.

(On Wednesday reliable sources in London said between 50 and 60 ships had recently been assigned to load lumber in British Columbia for United Kingdom ports.)

Timber Shortage

There is "an acute shortage" of timber in Britain, Col. Llewellin warned, and it was "no good encouraging people to think that a vast amount of timber will be imported in the next five or six months."

An order has been given for 2,000,000 yards of linoleum. This will replace wood as floor covering in army huts and ordnance factories.

Col. Llewellin said that this is a "good picture" of the empire's supply position: It has most of the world's rubber and tin; copper production has jumped from 85,000 tons annually in 1914 to 600,000 tons now; lead from 130,000 tons in 1914 to 630,000 tons now; aluminum from 13,900 tons in 1914 to 88,000 tons now, and asbestos from 9,800 tons in 1914 to 34,000 tons now.

Cold Weather Clears Stores of Winter Clothes

New York, Jan. 12 (AP).—Retail merchants' supplies of winter clothes were all but cleaned out this week as cold and snow kept America shivering, Dun & Bradstreet said today in a weekly survey.

Buying was especially large, the review said, in suburban areas. At the same time, business in some rural sections was virtually at a standstill due to weather conditions dicouraging travel to shopping centers. Average gain in volume over last year for all retailers was estimated by the agency at 7 to 13 per cent.

"Stores in some cities reported stocks of ice skates and sporting apparel virtually exhausted. Clothing promotion were scoring exceptional gains over last year, despite the generally smaller markdowns in effect," the review declared.

Penn.-Central Air Reports Record Travel

Pittsburgh, Jan. 12.—Over 120,000 revenue passengers were carried and more than 21,000,000 revenue passenger-miles were flown by Pennsylvania-Central Airlines during 1938 to give the company the best annual business report in its history, it was announced today by J. J. O'Donovan, vice president in charge of traffic.

Latest reports indicate that 122,303 revenue passengers flew PCA in 1939, a 43.07 per cent increase over the 85,484 revenue passengers who were carried by Pennsylvania-Central in 1938. Last year 21,192,904 revenue passenger-miles were flown, a 35.17 per cent gain over the 15,678,677 revenue passenger-miles flown in 1938, O'Donovan said.

Chain Store Sales Rise in December

New York, Jan. 12 (AP).—G. C. Murphy Co., today reported December sales of $8,162,694, an increase of 13 per cent from $7,222,988 in December, 1938. Total 1939 sales amounted to $47,284,964, or 12.1 per cent more than $42,190,212 in the preceding year. Company operates a chain of low-priced variety stores in the Middle West, East and parts of the South.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, Jan. 12 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. of Agr.).—Very little inquiry was being received for domestic wools in the Boston market today. Quotations were steady on fine domestic wools, but were somewhat irregular on the lower grades. Most dealers have adopted a waiting attitude and are not attempting to force sales at this time.

Stock Prices Continue Sharp Decline; Auto Production Increase Is Ignored Bond Market Generally Lower

New York, Jan. 11.—The second day of pronounced price weakness in equities erased most of the gains carried forward from the September rise. At the same time, dollar wheat disappeared from the Nation's wheat pits, all positions selling under that level and net declines at Chicago running from ½ to 1¼ cents a bushel. Cotton was likewise on the downgrade, losses ranging from 7 to 12 points.

Shares closed in an atmosphere curiously discouraging in view of the continuation of business and industrial activity at speeds much faster than a year ago. At the close of the market statisticians discovered the apparent paradox that while 100 key stocks were at a low since September 7 last, the 70 industrials and 30 rails, components, recorded lows only since November 30 and December 27, respectively. Volume at 1,109,460 shares was the largest of the year and since December 29.

Most issues were sliding downward from the start and had lost considerable ground in brisk dealings before a half-hearted rally developed on announcement of the automobile production figures, indicating that January and February output will break all records. This spurt, however, was brief and steady selling set in again during the last hour and a half, with closing prices at or near the lows for the day.

All Groups Under Pressure

Declines ran from 1 to 4 points in pivotal shares with selected preferreds in all groups, steels, rail equipments, motors and the stores being marked down most severely. Utilities continued to slip under influence of the associated gas reorganization and opinion in some quarters that relaxation of political attacks on the power industry can scarcely be expected in an election year. Carrier descriptions were among the most active stocks and gave ground at most points. Seaboard Air Line, a penny stock, led the list on turnover of 102,400 shares. New York Central and Pennsylvania also were among the day's leaders, each losing large fractions. Metals sagged with other sections. Anaconda and Kennecott losing a point or more each.

Leaders Decline

Sears Roebuck led stores lower with a decline of more than a point. Westinghouse dropped 3 and Chrysler 3¼. Bethlehem gave up a 2⅜ in a weak steel division where U. S. Steel barely escaped going through 60 for a net loss of 1⅞. International Harvester, Great Northern preferred, Johns Manville, Atlantic Coast Line, American Telephone and American Smelting were other pivotals which were sharply shaded in price.

Illustrative of the defeatist attitude of the long side was the action of the independent aviation sector where ten representative issues were off nearly a point each on the day. This occurred in the face of new reports that Britain and France would require at least 12,000 American-built planes over the next two years, should the war continue that long. It may have been doubt about the war which contributed a little to buyers' ristaste, but the censensus in Wall Street was that developments and prospects on the home economic front supplied the real explanation.

Prime Bonds Firm

Listed bonds eased generally today, with bond brokers quite as much at sea as to the reason as their equity brethren were about the drop in shares. Highly rated investment bonds dipped only by smallest fractions, and in some instances were unchanged. Speculative bonds were marked sharply lower, without much regard to type or circumstance. Foreign dollar obligations showed more losses than gains. Trading totaled $6,060,000, which is subnormal even for a New Deal market.

Long-term United States Treasury obligations drifted lower by a few thirty-seconds of a point, apparently because the high levels again are occasioning uneasiness among institutional investors. Best rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds were idle, and generally off a little, where changed.

Speculative carrier bonds fell by 1 to 3 points, more because buying interest was absent than because of any heavy pressure of liquidation. Holding company bonds and share privileges issues suffered because of the fall in related equities. Communications bonds joined the main downward trek, as did amusement and other special groups.

Scandinavian bonds were steady to firm in the foreign division, but Belgian and Italian obligations turned downward. The belligerent group was mixed, and Latin Americans remained idle.

New York, Jan. 12 (AP).—Cleveland was the fastest-building big city in the United States last year, a survey by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., mercantile agency, indicated today.

The survey showed issuance of permits for $18,305,000 worth of building in Cleveland last year compared with $7,203,500 in 1938, a gain of 154 per cent.

Los Angeles, the country's next largest builder, increased to $74,790,441 from 1938's $67,826,669. Detroit, third ranking, issued $61,664,099 of permits compared with $51,430,371 the previous year. Chicago ranked fourth.

The greatest gain in the Hudson dealer organization in ten years was also reported by Pratt, who said that 657 new dealers had been added since the introduction of the 1940 models, bringing the total dealer strength to 2,639.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 12.—The stock market finished the week today with prices droopy. Support was limited due largely to the approaching week-end but pressure was negligible. Early gains in gilt-edged issues were converted into small losses and home rails lost morning improvement. Kaffirs made a try for higher prices and oils were evenly maintained. Industrial leaders closed with minor price changes either way.

Paris—A wary attitude by bourse traders was stimulated today by intensified German air warfare. Prices moved irregularly. Utility and chemical issues improved and coal mining stocks held steady but the trend elsewhere was slightly downward.

Amsterdam—The bourse took its cue from Wall street's Thursday decline and finished with lower prices today for both domestic and foreign equities. Trade was small.

Liverpool—Cotton fluctuated erratically today to end 7 to 8 points lower. A recovery followed sharp early declines when demand was attracted by the lower levels.

Cotton Prices Continue Fall From Highs

New York, Jan. 12 (AP).—Cotton futures chalked up fresh losses today as the reaction from the late 1939 forward drive continued in full swing. Final prices were off 5 to 12 points. Foreign accounts sold heavily, mostly in the first hour, but weakness in security prices and other commodities kept demand well below the boiling point.

Overseas pressure appeared, influenced largely by erratically lower fluctuations in a thin Liverpool market. Trade interests and New Orleans cooperatives got behind the market for a time but the attempt at a rally lacked real punch.

A large domestic spot house activity sold March during the morning against purchases of May. Brokers said this was probably the transfer of long hedges forward. Worth Street reports indicated that increased offerings at 1-16 to ⅛ cent a yard under the market tended to restrict textile buling interests.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures held up well today in the face of a lower than expected December consumption report. Final prices were off 5 to 6 points.

December disappearance totaled 235,651 barrels, against 207,611 a year ago and the average trade guess of around 250,000 barrels. Traders said the less than anticipated consumption was offset in part by a drop in imports.

Sales totaled 179 contracts; March, 6.88 bid, May 7.00, July 7.09.

Wood, Demaret Lead Coast Golf

Demaret and Wood set the pace at the halfway pole by adjusting themselves to the changing weather conditions. The former came in with an even par round to add to his initial 68. Wood, sharing the first day's lead with Amateur Wilford Wehrle, of Racine, Wis., at 67, put together a 71 in his second circuit march. Wehrle, incidentally, was eight shots worse today with a 75.

One stroke behind the two leaders was Bruce Coltart, Haddonfield, N. J., with a 67-70—139. Horton Smith, of Oak Park, Ill., one of the professional elder statesmen, occupied the 140 bracket alone as the result of his second-round 71. Clayton Heafner, of Linville, N. C., ruled the 141 stroke column with a 68-73.

Little Tied at 142

After 141, the columns began to be crowded. At 142 were tied the two amateurs, Dawson and Wehrle, and Pros Ky Laffoon, Jimmy Thomson, Ed Oliver and Lawson Little, the latter winner of the recent Los Angeles Open. Thomson, fighting a cold, played against doctor's orders with a towel wrapped around his neck.

Rut Coffey, Winchester (Va.) pro, turned in a 77 card today for a 150 total, and barely got under the qualifying score of 151. Cliff Spencer, touring partner of Coffey, who played out of the Beaver Dam Club in the District of Columbia, failed to make the grade. He posted a 156 card, after taking a 79 today.

Ralph Guldahl, twice former United States Open champion, added another 74 for a 148, while Marvin (Bud) Ward, National Amateur titleholder, carded the same score for a two-day total of 146. The 15 lowest amateurs in the field qualified however.

General Tire Co. Defeats Suit Over Seizure of Auto

A $100,000 damage suit against the General Tire Co., 1602 Fourteenth street northwest, for alleged wrongful seizure of an automobile, was dismissed in District Court yesterday.

Phillip R. Belt, 38, of 208 Ascot place northeast, charged that the company unlawfully seized his car when he fell behind on a $13.90 bill.

The company's counsel, Lowry N. Coe, pointed out that a previous suit by Belt, in the Municipal Court, was dismissed because the alleged seizure was not ordered by an authorized officer of the company, but by a minor employe.

Justice F. Dickinson Letts ruled that the Municipal Court proceedings barred Belt's suit in the District Court.

By Florence Osborn.

Another contributor, Mrs. E. C. R., ran into difficulty when her partner, confused between preference raises and free raises, increased the contract unnecessarily with poor results. Mrs. E. C. R. presents her problem this way:

"As you no doubt will be able to tell, we are more or less amateurs, but certainly not because of our lack of enthusiasm.

South	West	North	East
1 ♢	1 ♡	Pass	Pass
2 ♣	2 ♡	3 ♢

"My partner sat North and held:

"Now, the question is, was she justified with that hand in raising the contract, merely to show she preferred diamonds to clubs?"

North's bid of three diamonds was a definite raise, as she was making a "free" bid over West's overcall of two hearts. Had West passed the second time round and East bid two diamonds over two clubs that would be a preference bid and show no strength of any sort.

The hand does not warrant a "free" bid, since it has no distributional values (singleton or doubleton) and has only one trick, the ace of spades. North should have passed over two hearts.

Ever since that day back in 1920 when I decided I didn't want to be a member of the New York City garbage removal department and that my destiny lay in replacing William S. Hart when the ravages of time nipped him, screen cowboys have held a peculiar fascination for me.

I have investigated, purely as a hobby, the beginning of a great many of these fearless riders of the range, who at the drop of a hat protect the property rights of good old Sam Guzzle, owner of the beleaguered Bar Nothing ranch and at the same time make a real honest home gal out of Sam's uppish, city educated daughter, Georgiana. The fact that most of these cinema cow caressers started life slipping the chocolate ice cream under the whipped cream and chopped nuts in a drug store or were gentlemen of the ensemble of Broadway has proved stimulating, rather than discouraging.

Now comes along a real honest to jiminy cowboy in the person of Gene Autry. Gene is the world's richest cowboy according to the Columbia Broadcasting System's release. He made all his money as a cinema star and a radio singer. He appears every Sunday at 6:30 on the C. B. S. network, including WJSV, so as you might suspect the Columbia press release speaks rather well of him.

However, there is one sentence in the release which we pass along "Gene never wears anything but cowboy clothes, whether he's before the camera, microphone or just at home he's always in character."

Anyhow, Cowboy Gene will be down for the Birthday Ball and your correspondent, for one, can't wait to see that noble knight of the range roughing it on the grazing ground of the Mayflower's lobby. He'll do his "Melody Ranch" broadcast from Washington and the WJSV officials have undertaken to make the broadcast as open to the public as possible, so if you'd like to see the world's richest cowboy who is always in character, drop a note along and we'll see what can be done about it. The date is January 28 and the time 6:30 p. m.

You're welcome and 6¾.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Chapter 42

IN THE EARLY FALL of that year Chris had a visit from Ted Lawrence. He came unannounced, to find Chris busy in the office and a line of vehicles of various sorts outside. He was sitting complacently on the porch when Chris came out, and he gave him a long look before Chris saw him.

"Great Scott! Ted!"

"What a memory you have for names!" said Ted admiringly. "You old scoundrel! It looks as if business is good, anyhow."

They were happy to be together again, even boisterous. But Ted was eyeing Chris appraisingly. He looked better, although he was still carrying his right hand and arm as if they were useless. What alarmed Ted was the look of quiet resignation in his face the face of a defeated man, accepting his defeat with gallantry, but defeated nevertheless.

The next day in Chris's office, Ted said:

"Let's get this straight. Do you mean to stay on here, Chris?"

"I don't know. There's some regeneration, but it will be a long time yet. Too long, Ted. A man can't drop out for a couple of years and hope to get back where he was. You know that. Besides——"

"What?"

"I have a life here, such as it is—and it's not a bad life. I like these people, and they like me. And I have no assurance that I'll ever hold a knife again. I've got a hand, but it's clumsy as the devil. No grip to it at all."

Ted examined both hand and arm carefully. The wrist drop had gone, and the fingers were fairly mobile; but the hand certainly lacked strength and grasp. Still holding it, he looked at Chris's face, quiet but bearing the deep lines of long tragedy.

"It's just a hand, Ted. That's all."

"It's a pretty good hand now, Chris. Better than I had expected. You'll be operating again before you know it, man!"

"That's as it may be. In the interval I'm here. That's all."

They made rounds together that afternoon in Chris's muddy car, jolting over back roads, turning into this lane or that. Once or twice Chris took Ted in to see a case or to help with something, and ever after Ted Lawrence was to remember those farmhouses, scattered and remote, the trees around them draped in autumn coloring, and Chris with that familiar forward thrust of the shoulders stooping to enter some low doorway. Chris was right. He had made himself a life out of wreckage; not the life he had wanted, but at least a useful one.

That night, however, with the early darkness and the lamplight, Ted began to find the silence and remoteness depressing, and to understand what the long winters must be to the man quietly smoking across the hearth from him. The talk had been desultory; professional talk, the hospital, the usual bits of medical gossip. Already there was talk of State medicine, and Ted was indignant.

"It's the end of the profession," he said. "It becomes a mechanized job. Good Lord, don't we treat the poor now? Where's the initiative? Where's the human element? Look at Barrett when he got the city job."

Then he flushed, remembering Katie. But Chris' face in the firelight was impassive. It was after that, coming out of a silence, that Chris asked abruptly about Beverly.

"Have you seen her?" he asked.

"Once or twice."

"And—how is she?"

"How do you expect her to be? She's lonely and pretty hopeless. And she's not particularly well. That stiff-necked pride of yours——"

"Did she tell you that she came here?"

"Yes, she did tell me, Chris. She came and you turned her out. I suppose it didn't occur to you how that would hurt her! She has her own pride. Aren't you ever going to learn anything about women?"

"Do you think I'll let any woman support me?"

"Exactly. So you are noble and heroic. You get the martyr's crown! You're fine. You've done the decent thing—by yourself! And she goes away feeling tawdry and cheap, like something you put in a dust can. By heaven, if I had your chance——"

When Chris spoke again, it was after a long silence. "You see," he said painfully, "I know what it would be. She didn't. I'd seen Katie try it and fail."

"Confound Katie!" said Ted.

He left the next morning. He had slept that night in one of the upper rooms, a lamp and a book beside him; but he did not read. He lay for a long time staring into the darkness after he had put out his lamp. Now at last he understood why Chris had sent Beverly away and chosen to go his way alone. He could not condemn her to this life. And he had already seen Katie try it and fail.

"The poor devil," he thought. "Mad about Beverly for years, and then sending her away."

But he determined that night to say nothing about Beverly's operation. After all, Chris had enough to bear, and what could he do?

When Ted left the next morning, however, it was on a more cheerful note, the house bright in the morning sunlight. With Ted's bag in his car and the engine running, Chris leaned over and put a hand on his shoulder.

"Good-by, old man. I hate to see you go."

"Then get in and come along. If you let this beat you now——"

THE WINTER came early that year, and Ted's visit had vaguely unsettled Chris. He worked hard, pushing his car as far as it would go through the early snowfalls, then trudging on foot the rest of the way. When he cut a path now with a snow shovel, he would use his right hand also, although it was still awkward. But the long evenings were bad. In vain he read—the papers, the medical magazines, the surgical journals. New things were on the way, new techniques, new anesthetics. But the journals daunted him. His confidence, the essential quality of the surgeon, had gone. The mere thought of once again standing by a table and picking up a knife sent him into a hot sweat. He wondered now, sitting there alone, at his own temerity in the past. Ted was right, he thought. He was a beaten man.

But he could feel strength coming back into his arm. He would flex it and extend it, watching his big muscles filling out, beginning to bulge. His hand, too, was definitely better. One night he tried to write with it and failed utterly. He persisted, however, and his coordination improved.

He kept Beverly rigidly out of his thoughts as much as he could. But strong as was his conscious and intelligent mind, buried beneath it somewhere was the blind force which activates and dominates all men: the will to go on, to persist and to fulfill its purposes. He could cut her out of his thoughts, but not out of his dreams. One night he made his first attempt at a letter to her. Slowly he wrote:

"I have been such a clumsy fool, my darling, wanting both you and life on my own terms. Now I know that I want you on any terms, and that life without you is not possible. If you can forgive that last and utter stupidity of mine——"

He sat back and looked at it. It was the sprawling hand of a schoolboy, uncertain and stumbling. He tore it up and put it in the fire. There was only one thing to do and that was to see her. She was entitled to that, at least; to know why he had sent her away, and that he was still wholeheartedly hers. Now he might go to her with something to offer. Not much as yet, but a hope. More than a hope.

But he did not go. Amy had not been well that winter, and Chris had been watching her heart. The telephone rang, and Hiram Mortimer spoke over the wire.

"Can you come over, Chris? Amy's pretty bad. I found her on the kitchen floor, and—I think she's dying."

He found her still on the floor, with Hiram on his knees beside her and her face gray, although she was now conscious. Later he and Hiram carried her up the steep farmhouse staircase and laid her on her bed. She did not speak until Hiram had left the room on some errand or other. Then she whispered:

"It's the end, Chris."

"Don't send for Noel. Not yet."

She lived for two month after that. Noel came home for the Christmas holidays. She was cheerful when he was about talking with those blue lips of hers, even trying to eat for his benefit. Chris, watching that heroic acting of hers, was moved beyond words.

"I'm not going back to school."

"I want you to go, Noel. See who I have to look after me!"

"And leave you sick? Not me."

She held him in her arms as if she could not let him go.

"My boy," she said. "My own boy. Don't worry. I'll be right by the spring. And be a good boy, Noel, dear. Always be a good boy."

"I don't want to go, Mother."

"I want you to go. Please."

So he went, resentful and suspicious. Chris and Hiram took him to the train, and as they stood together watching it pull out, Hiram's eyes were tired and bleak.

"If Amy goes," he said heavily, "I'll not be long behind her, Chris. And what's to become of him?"

"We'll not let Amy go, Hi. Not yet, anyhow. And you can trust the boy to me. You know that."

They had to let Amy go, however. Chris fought hard for her, calling for help from wherever he could get it, spending days and nights by her bed. Then one morning he was at the station again, meeting a pale boy whose eyes were red with weeping, and who needed Chris' steadying hand to get him to the car.

His heart ached for the boy. He longed to put an arm around him, but he knew that he was holding onto his control with difficulty. Instead he talked quietly: that death was either sleep—and sleep was a splendid thing, especially after pain—or it was something quite different, a new life, active and busy. An open door, not a closed one.

Noel listened, his young face set. "Which do you believe?" he said.

Chris hesitated. What did he believe, here in the fullness of his life, with that hand of his now strong on the steering wheel, perhaps lacking only confidence to send him back to work again, and an ordered universe about him? For a long time now he had lived with growth, growth of the soil, growth of human individuals dependent on the soil. There was a pattern somewhere, even if he did not understand it. What did he believe?

"I don't know, son," he said slowly. "I think there must be a God, and that He will take care of her."

Two days later they laid Amy beside David and Letitia, and Chris, standing by the grave, realized how inevitably that big family of theirs would join them, until at last they were all united once more, in the quiet earth and perhaps in some far kingdom of the soul. There was a pattern, after all.

Five days later Noel took sick, suddenly and violently, and Chris knew that he was facing a ruptured appendix. There was no time to get help from a distance, and no help at hand. He went out into the narrow hall outside the bedroom and stood there, opening and closing that right hand of his. Then, his mouth tight and his face set, he turned to Hiram.

"I'll have to do it, Hi," he said. "There's no time to get anybody here, even if I could find some one. Boil some water and put a blanket on the kitchen table. I'll be back as soon as I can."

An hour later he stood beside Noel as he lay on the table. He had given him the ether, and Hiram was keeping him under. In Amy's shining dishpan at his side lay his few instruments, now boiled and sterile. The boy was breathing easily, relaxed at last; and the room was silent, save for the breathing. Chris stood for a minute looking down at the valiant young body, so dear to him and now in his hands to save if he could. For the first time since his boyhood he muttered a prayer.

"Oh God, give me strength and skill," he thought.

IN THE EARLY spring of the following year Chris was preparing to go back and start his life again. He had no illusions. For two years he had been a country doctor, with all that that implied; and in that two years his city practice had been scattered to the four winds of heaven, and much of his reputation had been forgotten.

He was still a young man, as such things go. And there was a quiet strength in him now, as of one who had passed through deep valleys and no longer walked alone.

Chris glanced about him. On the mantelpiece beside David's horseshoe still stood a recent snapshot of Noel. He went over and, picking it up, took it to the lamp, and studied it. Strange that this should now be his boy, his son; this tall lad with Jerry's hair and his long-fingered, sensitive hands.

"I'm going to be a surgeon like you," he had said after that operation of his.

"You'll have to be a lot of things first."

"Sure. That's all right with me."

Grieving over Amy, grieving again over Hiram, who had followed her so soon, and yet with the adaptability of youth adopting Chris as both father and mother.

Strange, this life. Strange that long ago he had sat in the old back office talking to a girl in trouble, a brave girl who meant to bear her child; and that later on it had been that child who had brought back his confidence in himself. Now, stranger still, the child was his, to love and care for. He meant to make a good job of that.

His mind drifted to Beverly, if indeed it ever left her. She had gone abroad that winter, but now she was back. Back in the house again, with the scar on the marble mantel and with the spring grass sprouting over Caesar's grave. Some time, long ago, she had written him a letter, and Katie had destroyed it in that house. But he could tell her that now. It was indeed almost all he had to offer her—that, and the years he had loved her, and some possible future still vague and uncertain.

Tomorrow he would take the car and start back for the fight; like the war. Like——

He was whistling when the telephone rang and he answered it.

Capt. Spruance To Head New Naval District

Caribbean Post Goes to Commander Of Mississippi

The Navy announced yesterday that Capt. Raymond A. Spruance, commander of the battleship Mississippi, will take command next month of the newly established naval district in the Caribbean.

Capt. Spruance, who soon will be promoted to rear admiral, will be in charge of the naval air and submarine bases being set up in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to guard the Atlantic approaches to the Panama Canal.

A native of Baltimore, he was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1907. He served with the European squadron in 1924-25, and is a former instructor at the Naval War College.

At the same time the Navy assigned new commanders to the battleships Colorado, Texas and New York.

Capt. Richard S. Edwards, commander of the New London, Conn., submarine base, was given command of the Colorado, effective in May. Commander John L. Hall, of Williamsburg, Va., will be transferred from the Naval War College at the same time to command the Texas, and Capt. Clarence L. Hinkamp, on duty with the Naval Examining Board here, will take command of the New York in April.

Capt. Robert M. Emmett, present commander of the Texas, will come to duty with the Naval Examining Board in June, and Capt. Harry J. Abbett, now on duty at the Navy Department, will become chief of staff of the battle force destroyers.

Starving Birds and Squirrels Get Food by Grace of U. S.

Donald E. McHenry, National Capital Parks naturalist, yesterday inaugurated in Franklin Park an extensive bird-feeding program to meet emergency conditions in the National Capital Parks, resulting from the recent snow and severe weather conditions. This squirrel swooped in

The National Capital Parks office launched a novel relief project yesterday, sending its naturalist, Donald E. McHenry, to the various parks and circles to feed birds facing starvation because the ground is snow covered.

When he is finished, McHenry will have distributed 500 pounds of grain in Lafayette, Franklin, Lincoln, Stanton, Garfield, Meridian Hill, Judiciary and Mount Vernon Parks; Logan, Scott, Dupont, Washington, Thomas and Truxton circles; the Mall. Monument grounds and other locations in the park system.

Food is set out regularly by the parks office, winter and summer, for wild fowl at Roach Run and in Rock Creek Park, but the birds are provided for only when an emergency threatens, since they are able to take care for themselves when the ground is bare, it was explained.

Approximately 13 tons of peanuts, whole corn, cracked corn and wheat are fed annually to the water fowl, birds and squirrels in the park system, said Edmund H. Rogers, acting superintendent.

Ralph Hitz, Hotel Man, Dies at 48

Headed Management Of $100,000,000 Business in 7 Ctiies

By International News Service

New York, Jan. 12.—Ralph Hitz, 48, one of the best known hotel men in the United States, died at 9 o'clock tonight at Post Graduate Hospital.

For some weeks he had been suffering from hepititis, a liver ailment. He suffered a minor heart attack this morning, his physician reported, and a second heart attack in the afternoon.

Hitz had a skyrocket career that carried him from the service elevator of the famous Hotel Sacher in his native Vienna to the head of the $100,000,000 National Hotel Management Co. in the United States.

Credited with introducing more innovations into the hotel business than any other man in the industry's history, Hitz became manager-director of the Hotel New Yorker in 1929.

Less than two years after he joined the Hotel New Yorker, the National Hotel Management Co., Inc., was in operation with Hitz as president. It managed hotels in seven cities, New York, Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati, Dayton, Minneapolis and Dallas. It also operated restaurants at the Pan American Exposition at Fort Worth, the original Casa Manana at Dallas, the Great Lakes Exposition at Cleveland and the New York World's Fair.

Hitz is survived by his wife and a son.

Reappointment to Go To Senate Monday; Visits White House

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen was assured of reappointment for another three-year term following day to give the President the first day, to give the President the first pair of tickets to the Birthday Ball celebrations.

News of the contemplated nomination brought scores of congratulatory messages to the 72-year-old Commissioner who last year completed 50 years in the municipal service.

With the Commissioner on the White House visit was Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal.

President Roosevelt appointed Hazen in December, 1933, but he was not confirmed by the Senate until it convened early in 1934. He was reappointed by the President in 1937. This term expires next Tuesday.

Dr. Vaughan Dies; Arctic Explorer

Colorful Career Ends At 64; Was Marooned In North 19 Months

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 12.—Dr. John Colin Vaughan, 64, physician and Arctic explorer, died today in a hospital.

Survivor of many an adventure in untried corners of the world, he left a colorful exploring career to take up medicine and become the holder of numerous high medical posts in New York.

In 1898 he was the only one of a group to achieve passage through the overland route across the northwest territory to Alaska in search for gold.

In 1903, after his return to his medical studies, he became second assistant surgeon on the Ziegler Expedition to the North Pole under Anthony Fiala. He and his mates were marooned in the barren wastes of Franz-Joseph Land for 19 months.

Born in 1875 in the cabin of his father's ship at Calais, Me., he spent his first 15 years at sea and during his early manhood spent much of his time in mining, cattle ranching and exploring in the then territories of Arizona and New Mexico.

Postlude

Friday Morning Music Club presents in Barker Hall, Mary Park Clements and Julia Robertson, violinists; Sade Styron and Ethel Garrett Kaspar, pianists, and Margaret Besler, soprano.

Members and guests of the Friday Morning Music Club enjoyed yesterday a diverstified program which began with an unfamilian sonata by Handel for two violins and piano, played by Mary Park Clements, Julia Robertson and Sade Styron. This work in the grave key of G minor reflects the characteristic Handelian pomp in the opening andante and contains a plaintive arioso of appealing tenderness, while the two allegro movements dissipate the melancholy mood with lively fancies.

Ethel Garrett Kaspar devoted two groups of piano solos to compositions by Erno von Dohnanyi. In the first she played two of the four Rhapsodies in Opus 11, and in the second the F minor Intermezzo and the B minor Capriccio. All these pieces show the influence of Brahms, both in the technical method and in the harmonic texture, but they are far from imitative for they bear the stamp of Dohnanyi's personal idiom. Mrs. Kaspar read them with a fine fervor and a competent command of technique. Recalled at the close of the Capriccio, she added a pleasing Humoresque by Henry Balfour Gardiner.

An attack of laryngitis prevented participation of Wilhelmina Spanhoofd Walter, who was to have sung a group of songs by Korngold, Debussy, Respighi, Carpenter and Crist. The club is fortunate in having members who can volunteer in such emergencies. Margaret Besler saved the day by substituting three airs from "La Traviata" with Dorothy Radde Emery as accompanist. Her fresh and youthful voice had charm in the faded floridities of "Addio del passate," "Ah, fors' e lui" and "Sempre libera," and she negotiated the difficulties of phrasing with fluency and sure intonation.
